ROBBERS OF BANK TAKEN WITH LOOT

Winters Bandits Caught in Putah Canyon With $2652 Taken From Citizens' Bank in Bold Daylight Holdup

Youths From Los Angeles Confess to Crime When Arrested and Placed in Jail at Woodland by a Posse

WINTERS, April 21.—Confessing to holding up and robbing the Citizen's bank here yesterday noon of $2652, two men are being held in jail at Woodland, who give their names as H. Merritt and William Crum, both of Los Angeles, and both 25 years old.

The men were arrested at 3 o'clock this morning in the hills of Putah canyon, between Winters and Montecello, carrying the entire loot taken from the bank. Lee Sinkey, deputy state game warden, with Glenn Atterbury and Adolph Sliverstein, both of Woodland, composed the posse that arrested the bandits.

Unmasked and at the point of revolvers the two men entered the bank here, forcing President J. E Sackett and Frederick Knowlton, assistant cashier, into a rear room. After all the money in sight had been pocketed the men made their escape in their car. The bandits were not able to open the safe door. Knowlton climbed over a transom and gave the alarm of the robbery.

In discussing the holdup this morning from their cell, Merritt said they came from Los Angfieles to obtain work an that the idea to rob the bank struck them on the spur of the moment. Crum, he said, wanted the money to marry a Los Angeles girl and settle down

LASSEN BREAKS OUT AND SPOUTS SMOKE, ROCK

REDDING, April 21.—Lassen peak, the only active volcano in the United States, burst forth in a violent eruption near here just before dark last night. For miles around great volumes of black smoke could be seen as it issued from the crater. It was spouted skyward, although a heavy wind was blowing at the time and the smoke soon spread over a wide area toward the south.

Although the mountain has erupted several times recently the blow-off last night was said to have been the most severe in years. The intonation was heard for miles around.

Several reports reached ere that a shower of hot rocks fell on small settlements at the base of the mountain, but the reports could not be verified.

Auto Theft Charged To Youth and Bride

Roy Allen, 21, and Meryle Allen, his 18-year-old bridge, are being held by the Oakland police for investigation today in connection with an alleged auto theft. The couple were arrested last night in Sacramento.

The stolen auto is the property of A. Bloom, 6012 Claremont avenue, Oakland. It disappeared April 18 from Fifteenth and Jackson streets, where it had been parked by the owner.

Captain of Inspectors Richard McSorley received a message from Tracy last evening to the effect that Allen and his bride had been seen to abandon a car on the outskirts of Tracy, walk into town and take the auto stage for Sacramento. McSorley was given the number of the auto which identified it as Bloom's.

The sheriff at Tracy then telephoned to Sacramento and when the young couple left the stage they were arrested and brought to Oakland today by Inspectors Lew Agnew and John Mulhern.

FASCISTI PLEDGE ITALIAN TROOPS

Loyalty Oath Is Taken As Rome Solemnly Celebrates 2676th Anniversary.

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS LEASED WIRE TO TRIBUNE.

ROME, April 21.—The celebration today of Rome's 2676th anniversary was perhaps the most solemn in the long history of the Eternal City. Premier Mussolini promulgated a decree establishing April 21 as Labor day instead of May 1, and thus the traditional date of the city's foundation becomes a national holiday.

A feature of the ceremony was the administration of the Fascisti oath to the national militia. In this city the premier himself reviewed the phalanxes.

The troops marched along the archaeological promenade passing the Colosseum, the Roman forum, the arch of Constantine, and the Appian Way. A tribune had been erected for members of the diplomatic corps at a vantage point on the way in which Ambassador Child and his wife had reserved places. When Premier Mussolini appeared, the militia saluted by extending their right arms in the ancient Roman fashion, and took an oath of absolute loyalty to the nation and to the iron discipline of Fascismo. The oath was dictated by the commander of the Roman legion, who was stationed in a captive balloon.

Premier Mussolini last night issued an address to the national militia and the Fascisti on the eve of the celebration.

"This review, which will have deep significance," said the Premier, "clear to all, implies an oath of absolute loyalty to the nation, a promise of firm and implicit discipline to Fascism and its leaders and an eloquent warning to adversaries of all kinds.

"There is no turning back. What was undertaken after prolonged suffering and martyrdom will be achieved. That is the order of our dead. For that you Black Shirts will take oath today in your invincible phalanxes Long Live Italy! Long live Fascism!"

Injured Girl Sent To Detention Home

SAN FRANCISCO, April 21.—Gertrude Chrenik, the 14-year-old girl who was found lying dazed in the basement of her home, 1452 Forty-seventh avenue, after a four-day disappearance was taken this morning to the Juvenile Detention home by police request. The girl was little the worse for her experiences, whatever they have been, and the police so far have been unable to reconcile themselves with her story.

The girl was evidently carried into the basement sometime Thursday night. She claims to have been struck on the head on her way to school Monday and to remember nothing afterwards until yesterday. Her mother in reporting her disappearance to the police declared that she had several times played truant from school.

Husband Boasted of Affairs, Says Wife

Charging that her husband, Alexander W. Kane, a salesman for a packing company and owner of two butchershops in San Francisco, boasted to her of his affairs with other women, Mrs. Irma W. Kane of Oakland today filed suit for divorce.

The couple were married in San Rafael March 30, 1911, and separated April 19, 1923. Mrs. [illegible] beat her on one occasion and that he frequently cursed her. She also charges that he urged her to seek the company of other men.

Mrs. Kane asks attorney's fees of $1000, alimony of $300 a month and $100 court costs.

Washington Wins Both Boat Races in Annual Classic With California

Washington crews were victorious in both varsity and freshman boat races against California today. The northern varsity crew crossed the finish line at the mouth of the Oakland estuary nearly five lengths ahead of the California boat, and a few minutes later the Washington freshmen had won by more than three lengths from the Berkeley first-year men.

Washington took the lead near the start in each race, and held it throughout the entire course, at many points gaining rapidly over the California oarsmen.

NORTHERNERS ROW FAST STROKE.

At the end of each race Washington's crew was rowing with the fast even stroke with which they had begun, while the California men were exhibiting a more ragged performance.

The time for the varsity race was 18 minutes, 5 2-5 seconds for the winning Washington crew, while the California boat made the distance in 18 minutes and 40 seconds. The race was over a three-mile course beginning at Webster street bridge and ending at the mouth of the estuary, opposite the Alameda mole.

The time in the freshman race was 9 minutes and 57 seconds for the Washington boat, and 10 minutes and 7 seconds for that of California. The freshmen rowed up the estuary over a two-mile course, beginning near the finish line of the varsity race, and ending off the Moore shipyards.

WIND HELD BOTH RACES BACK.

Both races were rowed with a strong northwest wind blowing across the estuary. Because of the wind, the races were postponed about half an hour, in which time it died down considerably. The varsity race began in comparatively smooth water off the inner harbor docks, but ran into a choppy sea off the Southern Pacific mole, across which the wind had a clean sweep.

The rough water did not apparently interfere in the least with the work of the Washington varsity, which maintained its long even stroke without perceptible difficulty, and rapidly increased its lead over the California varsity.

Behind the racing shells plowed a fleet of tugboats, pleasure launches and government tugs, filled with spectators, while along the Alameda mole long observation trains kept pace with the rowers.

HUSKIES HUG NORTHERN SHORE.

In the varsity race the Washington oarsmen hugged the north shore of the estuary, to get the advantage of the smoother water. The California crew rowed almost in midstream, in the choppiest part of the course.

In the freshman race the positions of the boats were reversed, with the California crew holding the northern side. Instead of taking to the rougher water in midstream, however, Washington's coxswain steered close to the California boat, and shared with it the smoother going in the lee of the shore.

The varsity race started with both crews rowing a stroke of 34 to the minute. When they ran into the choppy water and the strong wind half way down the course, however, both crews slowed down to a 32-to-the-minute stroke.

MICHIGAN TOWN PERILED BY FIRE

Allegan and 4000 Citizens Threatened; Flames Riot in Pennsylvania.

BRAVO, Mich., April 21.—(By International News Service.)—A forest fire beyond control in the lands, after narrowly missing this village, has now turned eastward toward the town of Allegan. A fortunate change of the wind turned the course of the fire so that it passed by this place, destroying only a few unimportant buildings on the far outskirts.

The 4000 inhabitants of Allegan have been warned to prepare for hasty evacuation if the flames, fanned by a high southwest wind, continue on their present course. A number of stock farms between here and Allegan are in the path of the flames.

The flames, which started Tuesday a short distance from here, have devastated an area a mile or more in width.

POTTSVILLE, Pa., April 21 (By International News Service).—Great forest fires are sweeping over this part of the State, doing big damage to timber lands. Rains for the last ten days have been light, and accumulations of dry leaves make the forests a vast tinder box. State wardens are fighting the flames.

BLUEFIELD, W. Va., April 21. (By International News Service.)—A tented city was rising today upon and around the site of Burke a mining town in McDowell county, which was wiped out by fire yesterday morning with an estimated loss of $500,000 to $600,000.

OIL PROMOTERS IN FRAUD PROBE

Trials of Indicted Men Will Start May 15, Says U. S. Attorney.

LOS ANGELES, April 21.—(United Press.)—In co-operation with the federal government's drive against fake oil promoters in Texas the district attorney's office here announced today that a widespread investigation will be begun into the operations of "mushroom" oil promotion companies in Southern California, which are alleged to have mulcted the public out of millions of dollars.

FORT WORTH, Tex., April 21.—Indicted oil operators and their bondsmen besieged the federal building today, arranging for their freedom following yesterday's action of the grand jury in returning mail fraud bills against ninety-two different individuals representing eighteen firms with a capitalization of more than $200,000,000. The average bond was around $5,000. Trials of the indicted men will start about May 15, United States District Attorney Zweiful said.

The indictment against those connected with the General Lee Development Company interests charges that the promotions were manipulated by using as a figurehead an elderly man, "General" Robert A. Lee. This man, according to the indictment, was held forth fraudulently to the public as a descendant of the famous Lees of the Colonial days and General [illegible].

General Robert A. Lee was further represented by the company as being "a successful, experienced geologist; that he was in fact a miracle man in geology; that he had made fortune in the location of oil wells and among geological men was revered and admired." Not one of those representations was true, the indictment charges, but on the other hand, General Robert A. Lee, was in fact a laborer without expert knowledge and never known to the public as a geologist. Also the indictment charges that General Robert A. Lee is not in fact a descendant of the historic Lee family and General Robert E. Lee of the Confederacy "nor was he giving his life to the oil industry or to the cause of humanity, but was only trying to help promote a fraudulent scheme."

U. S. DESTROYERS SENT TO HANKOW

Fleet to Protect Americans Menaced As Civil War Threatens China.

SHANGHAI, April 21 (By International News Service). — War clouds which threaten to develop into civil war throughout China today resulted in the ordering of seven American destroyers now at Shanghai to Hankow.

The first clash of the new civil war is expected to come at Hankow and may endanger many American residents of that section. The destroyers will protect American interests.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen is now fighting in South China for the control of the southwest section of the country, while a clash between the two war lords of the north—Wu Pei Fu and Chuang Tso Lin—seems pending.

CANTON, April 21 (By the Associated Press).—With heavy engagements proceeding just outside of Canton, troops from Yunnan supporting Sun Yat Sen have recaptured the arsenal from the opposing faction, the Kwangsi army, which is retreating northward. Both sides have suffered heavy casualties.

Fierce fighting is in progress on the West river. Sun Yat Sen's Kwangtung troops, entering Canton from Kongmoon, to the south, are cooperating with the Yunnan forces.

The city of Canton remains peaceful. Telegraph and telephone communication with the outside has been interrupted, however, and cablegrams are being mailed to Hongkong for transmission.

CLARA PHILLIPS REPORTED TAKEN

"Hammer Murderess" Said Held in Honduras for L. A. Officers.

SACRAMENTO, April 21 (By International News Service). — The woman reported under surveillance in Honduras on suspicion of being Mrs. Clara Phillips, Los Angeles "hammer murderess," was placed under provisional arrest today, according to Sheriff William I. Traeger of Los Angeles, who arrived here to take charge of hurrying extradition proceedings.

Traeger said he received notification of the suspected hammer murderess' arrest from the State Department at Washington, upon his arrival here from San Francisco.

The Los Angeles sheriff wired a description of Mrs. Phillips to the State Department today, whence it will be relayed to the Honduras authorities. The identification material will include a technical description of the woman slayer's fingerprints. Traeger further stated he will know by nightfall whether the woman arrested in Honduras is Mrs. Phillips.

If the suspect is identified as the escaped slayer of Mrs. Alberta Tremaine Meadows, pretty 20-year-old Los Angeles woman, a requisition for the return of Mrs. Phillips to California will be forwarded to Honduras immediately, Sheriff Traeger stated that he will personally present the papers to the Honduran authorities and take the prisoner in custody.

The "Mr. Carsen" reported in company with Mrs. Phillips at the Tegucigalpa hotel is believed by Sheriff Traeger to be Jesse Carsen, "two-time loser," and wanted by California forestry authorities for arson. Had the Los Angeles authorities connected Carsen with the Phillips case, the hammer murderess would never have escaped from Mexico City, where she is reported to have sought refuge several [illegible].

HUSBAND HELD AS ESCAPE AID.

LOS ANGELES, April 21 (By International News Service).—Armour L. Phillips, husband of Clara Phillips, "hammer murderess," under provisional arrest in Honduras, will be charged with having aided and abetted in her flight to Mexico, it was announced today by Deputy District Attorney Asa Keyes. Phillips was arrested last night but denied he knew anything concerning his wife's whereabouts.

SACRAMENTO, April 21 (By United Press).—Governor Friend W. Richardson last night received a telegram from Secretary of State Hughes saying the state department was advised that a woman answering the description of Clara Phillips, escaped Los Angeles "hammer murderess," had been located in Honduras. The telegram asked whether her extradition was desired.

Governor Richardson immediately wired District Attorney Woolwine at Los Angeles to prepare the necessary papers for the institution of extradition proceedings in behalf of California. He also replied to Secretary Hughes asking that the state department request Honduras authorities to detain the woman.

A man and woman described as "Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Carsen" were

Berlin Plans New Offer On Reparations

Leaders of Riot in Mulheim Threaten Uprising in Ruhr District.

BERLIN, April 21.—(By International News Service.)—Following a meeting of the cabinet today it was reliably reported that Germany will make a new reparations offer to the allies next week, raising the sum they originally proposed from $30,000,000,000 gold marks to about 35,000,000,000 gold marks.

German officials hope their offer will be of such a nature as to induce Great Britain and Italy to ask evacuation of the Ruhr by the French and Belgians.

GERMANY INSISTS LOAN NECESSARY.

Germany maintains the attitude that an international loan is necessary to settle reparations accounts and that in order to meet the loan, the Ruhr mines and industries must be returned.

Lord Curzon's speech in the British parliament yesterday was construed by the German cabinet as an invitation to Germany to make an offer. German newspapers, in commenting today upon the speech of the British foreign secretary, emphasized the point that Great Britain believes the time opportune for proposals. It is understood that the new offer will not be addressed solely to France, but will also be addressed to Great Britain, France, Italy and Belgium.

COMMUNISTS DEMAND PAY FOR WOUNDED

MULHEIM, April 21.—(By the United Press.) — Armed guards patrol the inner city today, as a new outbreak is threatened by hungry rioters.

Communist leaders in the 2-day demonstration which cost the lives of nine men with sixty wounded, have demanded that the city supply compensation for wounded members of their party and the survivors of their dead. Refusal of this demand may mean a renewal of fighting, it is feared, and ambulances are being held ready.

A varied circulation has been given unconfirmed reports that the communists had planned a general uprising in the occupied district of the Ruhr, and that the outbreak here was part of their revolutionary program.

ESSEN, April 21.—(By International News Service.) Order prevails at Mulheim today after a three-day fight between Communists and police in which three score were killed or wounded. All the casualties were on the side of the rebels. After being driven from the city the rioters looted the suburbs. Nearly fifty arrests were made by German police.

The French military authorities are reported to have promised the German police co-operation to prevent similar outbreaks in the Ruhr.

Irrigation to Cause Jordan's Plain to Bloom

LONDON, April 21. (By Associated Press.)—The Dead Sea will soon come to life and the land which in Joshua's time "flowed with milk and honey" is to come into its own, according to Albert Hiorth, outlining a scheme for the irrigation of the plain of Jordan between the lake of Genesareth and the Dead Sea, to the members of the Victoria Institute here.

Wide areas, he said, were covered with fertile soil, suitable for cultivation and irrigation was only needed in those districts. It is proposed to build canals on both sides of the river Jordan and parallel with it to the water from the lake of Genesareth. Throughout their length they would be furnished with suitable outlets for the distribution of water over the plains sloping toward the river Jordan.

As a source of energy there is planned a hydro-electric plant on the western shore of the Dead Sea, which would receive its energy from the Mediterranean through a tunnel under Jerusalem.

The plan, added the lecturer was probably some 2,000 to 3,000 years old.

SANATORIUM AT LIVERMORE TO BE ONE OF TWO

Lack of Funds For Ex-Service Hospital Given As Cause.

Information from official sources in Washington bears out the report that the tubercular sanatorium, to have been constructed by the government at Livermore at a cost of $1,600,000, is to be abandoned in favor of a much less pretentious institution.

In reply to a telegram asking if the Livermore site for the sanatorium was to be abandoned, M. G. Callaghan, Livermore postmaster, has received the following information from Congressman James H. McLafferty of Alameda:

Washington, D. C.,

M. G. Callaghan, Livermore, Cal.

—Director of Veterans' Bureau says story referred to in your telegram of April 20 unfounded. General needs of State such that only solution of problem is to provide hospitals for both Northern and Southern California. Direct statement that nothing has been abandoned. Funds available were not sufficient to permit acceptance of Livermore bid and also provide adequate hospital for Southern California. Bureau office pressing investigation looking to early solution of problem.

(Signed) H. P. SMITH,
Secretary to Congressman James H. McLafferty.

INVESTIGATION MADE.

Investigation into the rumored abandonment of the Livermore site was begun by the Chambers of Commerce of the bay cities yesterday following an announcement from the office of the architects who designed plans for the Livermore institution that political influence had succeeded in having the hospital moved to Los Angeles.

Neither the Oakland or San San Francisco chambers of commerce which are working together in opposing the transfer of the hospital site, have received answers to telegrams sent to the director of the Veterans' Bureau asking for official information regarding the proposed transfer.

Until they receive an official statement informing them of the exact facts of the situation, the officials of these bodies are withholding any action, but it was announced that any move to alter the plans for the hospital as they were originally drawn would meet with vigorous opposition.

At the office of Matthew O'Brien, San Francisco architect, whose plans for the Livermore institution were accepted and approved by the heads of the Veterans' Bureau two months ago, it is declared that the proposed division of the hospital between the northern and southern parts of the state is just a cloak to shield the actual transfer of the sanatorium to Los Angeles.

William Monser, who has been closely identified with the Livermore plans for a hospital, says a few small buildings will be erected on the $300,000 site purchased in Livermore by the government, and that the bulk of the institution will be established upon a site to be purchased near Los Angeles.

FAVORS TWO HOSPITALS

Senator Samuel M. Shortridge, who is now in San Francisco, is said to have expressed himself in favor of two hospitals, one in each section of the state.

Dr. John P. Slavich, commander of the Oakland post of the American Legion, has joined in the fight to keep the hospital in Livermore.

"If the American Legion thought that the Los Angeles site were better for a hospital than the one at Livermore, we would work to get it there. But the testimony of medical experts for years has proved Livermore to be the best spot on the Pacific coast for tubercular patients, and that being the case we propose to keep the hospital where it belongs," said Slavich today.

Al Chase, past commander of the post, who was influential in having the Livermore site selected, is organizing ex-service men of the city to create a sentiment against the split in the hospital.

CRUELTY CHARGED TO NIECE-IN-LAW BY AGED WOMAN

Mrs. Marie H. Warren Asks Court for Remedy of Alleged Fraud.

Taking advantage of Mrs. Maria Harris Warren, aged 78, while she was seriously ill, it is charged in a suit just filed, Alice Warren, with the cognizance of her husband, Edward H. Warren, a nephew, induced the elder woman to assign to her property worth $2400 by falsely and fraudulently representing that the instrument was merely a power of attorney.

The complaint recites that the plaintiff and her husband, Joseph Warren, were both seriously ill February 10 last, when Mrs. Alice Warren induced her to sign the alleged agreement by representing that she needed a power of attorney, in order to draw money to pay for their care.

Eight days later, it is set forth, Mrs. Alice Warren and her husband removed the two old people from where they were living to their own home on Hopkins street, near the Altenheim home. Her husband had to be taken on a stretcher and she was carried to and from a taxicab by Edward Warren, it is claimed. Two days later Joseph Warren died.

Then, before the funeral, the aged plaintiff alleges, Alice Warren told her that she was going to take the money and buy a house, saving enough to pay funeral expenses. But, after first representing that she had paid the funeral expenses, the younger woman admitted she had not and the funeral bill still remains unpaid, it is declared.

In addition, the plaintiff declares that the room she was put in by the defendants was cold and received but little sunshine and that she left there March 2. The plaintiff then avers that she never considered Alice Warren a friend and that the interest shown by her was a "pecuniary" interest and a "desire to get her money by hook or by crook." She asks that the agreement be canceled and that the defendants be ordered by the court to give up possession of the property, which includes jewelry belonging to herself and to the estate of her late husband.

Chevalier Baldi is on his way home from Italy.

Biennial Ball Of Legislature Social Success

SACRAMENTO, April 21.—The biennial legislature ball last night was voted a social success. Sacramento's largest and finest hall, cleverly decorated for the event, held the large crowd permitted to attend the function. Carnival features were included late in the evening, with staid senators and sedate assemblymen donning crepe paper hats, throwing confetti and joining in the spirit of the affair.

An amendment removing the statute prohibiting execution of youths less than 18 years of age, is before the assembly for action introduced by Assemblyman George H. Davis, Imperial.

Collector of Internal Revenue Goodsell, of Los Angeles, was a visitor at the capitol yesterday, appearing in opposition to a measure requiring the federal government to pay a 25-cent fee on liens and releases.

J. Ogden Armour, Chicago packer, visited Governor Richardson late yesterday. The capitalist declared his call was purely a social one. However, Armour interests in the Sutter Basin territory, recently involved in a reclamation board levee resolution, is believed to have entered into the conversation.

Oil Interests Charged With Anti-Tax Lobby

By E. VAN LIER RIBBINK

TRIBUNE BUREAU, Sacramento, April 21. — Charging that a combination has been effected between lobbyists, who claim that they represent the General Petroleum Company and the other leading oil companies of the state, and the representatives of the truck and draying interests, for the purpose of defeating the new motorvehicle bill and the two-cent tax on gasoline, Senator Arthur H. Breed of Piedmont has today addressed letters of protest to the executive officers of the General Petroleum Company, to Mortimer Fleishhacker of San Francisco and others, against the activities of these lobbyists. Senator Breed categorically asks the executives of the oil companies concerned to inform him whether or not the special representatives of the oil companies at the capitol, whom he charges with lobbying against the Breed bill, are doing so with the knowledge and authorization of the corporations concerned.

Senator Breed declared today: "C. R. Stevens, secretary of the General Petroleum Company, is fighting the bill, and he is aided by the representatives of the truck and draying interests, who are now out in the open trying to defeat the weight provisions of the bill.

MAIN FIGHT ON TAX.

"However the main fight is being directed against the two cents per gallon tax on gasoline. If this combination succeeds in its efforts to defeat the bill, or to dismember it, it would mean that the state of California will be deprived of the means required for the proper upkeep of the highways, which would be largely furnished by the two-cent gasoline tax, and that our highways will remain unprotected from the ravaging effects of heavy trucks of a weight exceeding 22,000 pounds, which is the limit provided under my bill. I shall vigoroughly oppose the activities of these lobbyists, for their success would be highly detrimental to the preservation of the entire State highway system."

It is understood that the main objection of the oil corporations to the two-cent gasoline tax rests on the theory that this tax will bring about a reduced consumption of gasoline.

The first proof that an agreement had been effected between the oil corporations and the truck and draying interests, came at the meeting of the Assembly committee on revenue and taxation, when Assemblyman Clarence Morris of San Francisco and Elmer P. Bromley of Los Angeles threw an obstacle in the way of the motor-vehicle bill and the gasoline tax measure by recommending that the gasoline tax measure be referred back to the Assembly committee on motor vehicles. Much feeling was aroused during the discussion, and Assemblyman Frank Coombs of Napa, chairman of the committee, declared that he would refuse to sign the report recommending that the bill be referred back.

SIGNATURES REFUSED.

The opponents of the bill thereupon declared that their motion "did not require the signature of the chairman"; and that the signature of T. M. Wright of San Jose, vice-chairman of the committee, would be sufficient for their purpose. Wright, hereupon informed the committee that he would also refuse to sign the report. The committee thereupon decided to present their recommendation to the Assembly without the signatures of either the chairman or the vice-chairman, and acted accordingly. When subsequently presented to the Assembly, Speaker Frank F. Merriam refused to accept the recommendation, since it lacked the two signatures of the chairman and vice-chairman. The result is that the bill remains in the Committee on Revenue and Taxation for the present, and that the fight is to be continued in that body.

In refusing to sign the recommendation to refer the bill back to the Motor Vehicle committee, Coombs and Wright declared that the bill involved a question of taxation only; that it was up to the Revenue and Taxation committee to deal with it on those grounds, and that the matter was entirely out of the jurisdiction of the Motor Vehicle committee. In commenting on the action of the bill's opponents to refer the measure back to the Motor Vehicle committee, Senator Breed declared that "this is the most high-handed procedure I have ever seen in the Legislature, and these obstructionist tactics are merely being used to defeat the bill."

Interest in the subsequent fortunes of the Breed bills overshadows everything else for the time being—even the budget. Legislators are awaiting the reply of the oil corporations to Senator Breed's protest, and it is generally agreed that the corporations will either have to disavow the activities of their special representatives at the capitol, or that they will have to throw off all disguise and come out openly in opposition to the bills.

BUDGET FACTIONS CLOSING BATTLE

SACRAMENTO, April 21.—Prediction that the biennial budget, now being considered by the assembly, will be approved by Wednesday without further amendments, was made today by Assemblyman Kline, chairman of the ways and means committee.

"I think the opposition to the budget will collapse suddenly when it does come and the budget as a whole will go through without debate," Kline stated. "Although I understand an amendment for additional tuberculosis relief will be offered, I do not think that it, or any of the other amendments under discussion, will be included. The opposition has been unexpectedly strong, I will admit, but I am sure the governor will see his budget approved early in the week, carrying practically the same figures he designated."

Opponents of the budget, however, declare that just as the document has been altered in some provisions, so will it be changed in others. Additional increases for teachers' colleges are due for consideration, and the anti-Richardson legislators are sure they will be favored, as were items to increase the San Francisco teachers' college appropriation.

There is no doubt but what the budget struggle has been bitterer than was at first thought possible. Even the most optimistic anti-administration lawmaker would have hesitated to predict the strength for his faction which has developed. Administration support has been thwarted in every motion, but the one raising the railroad commission item.

Although there was no session of either house scheduled for today, Assembly leaders of both sides were at their desks, outlining the campaign for the budget fight resolution Monday, and seeking ways to swing another vote or two as a means of making victory assured.

APPORTIONMENT COMPROMISE IS NOW PROPOSED

Plan Would Give Los Angeles Control of Assembly for Four Sessions.

TRIBUNE BUREAU, SACRAMENTO, April 21.—A proposal has been made to the Los Angeles delegation by Assemblyman Chas. W. Cleary, of Tulare, for a compromise on re-apportionment. The compromise is in the form of an amendment to the Baker re-apportionment bill, which asks additional representation for Los Angeles. Under the amendment the provisions of the Cleary bill, which would limit Alameda county, Los Angeles and San Francisco to ten assemblymen each, would take effect January 1, 1931, but in the meantime the members of the legislature for the sessions of 1925, 1927, 1929 and 1931 would be elected from the districts provided in the Baker bill, thus practically giving Los Angeles control of the assembly for the three sessions mentioned.

Cleary stated that he would also entertain a plan whereby the maximum representation for "any county or city and county" in the senate would be limited to five senatorial districts. In that event, the assembly would continue to be elected according to the present lines of apportionment, but the senate would have a majority of members from the "cow counties."

There seems little likelihood, however, that the Los Angeles delegation will entertain the Cleary offer, which would only result in a temporary advantage for the southern metropolis. It is also unlikely that, in the event the compromise were accepted by Los Angeles, the legislators who are at present in favor of the Cleary bill, would vote for it, seeing that these legislators do not relish the thought of letting Los Angeles have her way with the control of the state during the three sessions referred to.

The intent of the original Cleary measure is to give the rural districts control of the assembly.

WIFE CHARGES DESERTION.

McKean, an assembler, began to quarrel with her and find fault and during their married life he choked her several times and once struck her in the face, says Mrs. Myrtle McKean in her plea for divorce. She alleges that he finally left her and their three children April 15. She asks custody of three sons, the household effects at 3755 Webster street and $100 a month maintenance.

NOVAES SCORES EASY TRIUMPH AT AUDITORIUM

Music Lovers Accord Brazilian Girl Enthusiastic Praise.

By RAY HARRISON DANFORTH.

The triumph of Guiomar Novaes at the Auditorium Theater last evening was achieved with hardly a preliminary skirmish. The variety of tone coloring, the broad and adequate phrasing and the delicacy of sentiment with which she invested the ever lovely ballet "aire" that Saint-Saens adapted from Gluck were prima facie evidence of her merit. There were greater triumphs as the program progressed, but none which this did not predict.

For instance, there was a triumph in technique in such things as the Chopin C minor scherzo and Moskowski's "La Jongleuse," of interpretative facility in the Schumann "Carnaval" and of poetic feeling in a Chopin impromptu.

This is the second of recent opportunities to hear the "Carnaval," and her rendition would have been interesting even without the chance of comparing it with Cortot's of a week ago. The two styles are as different as night and day. Cortot's variety is cerebral, Novaes' is emotional. He never once achieved a real fortissimo; her playing of the "preambule" and the march of the David-band against the Philistines was massive in its forcefulness. The valse noble and the valse allemande sang for him, but danced for her. There was less of delicacy in her rendition; it had given way to sprightliness and fire.

Technically this Brazilian girl is admirably fortified. Her finger work, the pedal effects she derives, the fluency with which she attacks tremendous chords, the evenness and purity of her trills are but a few of the details. Her style, too, is individual. It is a youthful style, yet under control, and exhibiting always an obvious strength in reserve; temperamental, yes, but not hysterical.

The concert concluded the seventh season of the "Artist" series, under the management of Miss Zannette W. Potter. The house was filled, and most enthusiastic.

BURGLAR SAVED BY SCREAMS OF WOMAN ROOMER

By sitting up in bed and screaming, Miss Grace Moses this morning frightened away a burglar who was climbing in the window of her room at 5679 Pryal avenue.

Mrs. A. C. Wintermute, living at the same address, heard the man attempting to enter the house, and telephoned the Central police station. She was told to remain quiet until the police arrived, and Sergeant John W. Maxey and Policeman J. D. Hall were dispatched to the house.

Miss Moses knew nothing of the police instructions as to remaining quiet, however, and when she saw the man entering her room she screamed. The man immediately dropped back into the yard and when the two policemen arrived he had disappeared.

Things they Ask the Tribune BUREAU OF INFORMATION

"What will remove varnish from a germanstone sink?"

In "Scientific Formulas" we find the following for removing varnish: Arachic acid, 18 parts; benzine, 42 parts; methyl alcohol, 40 parts. Solution is applied with a brush. Another mixture for the same purpose is pearlash with quicklime in aqueous solution.

"What is a good method of getting rid of sow bugs?"

Place arsenic over sliced raw carrots and put under a board in the garden or somewhere near where the sow bugs are. They will eat this and die. Place in the garden late in the afternoon and allow to remain all night. Be careful to place the poison so no person, child or animal could get it and be poisoned by mistake. Seed stores carry mixtures to do away with bug pests.

"Are sow bugs likely to eat berries and plants?"

As a rule sow bugs do not eat berries and plants.

"Who was Mosethal?"

Salomon Hermann Mosenthal was a German dramatist. He was born at Cassel, Prussia, January 14, 1821.

"Who was Ferdinand Hiller?"

Ferdinand Hiller was an eminent German composer, pianist, director and writer on music. He was of Hebrew descent. He conducted the Lower Rhine festivals from 1850 for several years, whenever they were held at Cologne.

"The Roundup." By whom was it painted and where is it to be found?"

There are many pictures bearing this title. The one by Frederic Remington is probably the best known. It was formerly on exhibition at the Palace of Fine Arts in San Francisco, but is not there at the present time. You could probably find a copy of it in some art collection at the Oakland or San Francisco public libraries.

"Will you please tell me in your column if there is a way to dye satin slippers black?"

Yes. Any good standard dye obtained from a drug store will do. Be sure and get a dye for silk, and not for wool or cotton.

"What date was Good Friday, 1876?"

April 14.

"Please tell me what is the largest number of passengers that have been carried in an airplane."

No record of this is available according to the Pacific Aeronautic Society. A Handley-Page plane in England carried 25 passengers in a trip up the Thames. At present there is talk of building a plane that will fly between New York and Chicago, carrying 200 passengers and 25,000 pounds of freight.

Panama Trip In Sunday Tribune

"ON the Golden Trail—Crossing the Isthmus in Forty-Nine," is the subject of the next "Days of '49," by Harry C. Petersen in Sunday's TRIBUNE Magazine. It deals with the adventures of Delaware Dick, a member of the caravan that sailed to Panama and crossed overland, thence coming to San Francisco by boat. Delaware Dick, as is revealed in this article, possesses the happy faculty of laughing at his own misfortunes, even while they are taking place.

Other features in the Sunday TRIBUNE Magazine are: "Lost! A Ship's Propeller," by Jack Bell; "Miss Clemens of Chinatown," by Jessie Juliet Knox; "Glaciers in the Land of Poppies," by Charles Warner; "Those Pink-Cheeked Kids of 70," by Omar Moffatt; "The Hottest Town on Earth," by John S. Thomas; "Atolls of the Sun," by Frederick O'Brien; "A Barefoot Dance in Church," by Frank R. Schurmann; "Bad Tempers," by Geraldine; "Ingenious Nests of the Birds," by Frank A. Leach; "Hunting the Earthquake Nests," by Frank Cliff, and an etching of Mission San Luis Rey by Ed. Borein, noted Oakland artist.

MAYOR RECALLS WAR WITH SPAIN

A proclamation, reminding the people of Oakland that war against Spain was declared 25 years ago, was issued today by Mayor Davie. The proclamation follows:

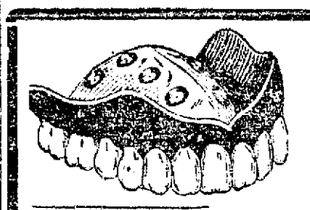

To the People of Oakland:

Friday, April 21, is the 25th anniversary of the declaration of war by the United States against the Kingdom of Spain.

This war was the motif for the elimination of all feeling of sectionalism in this country. It resulted in the liberation of a great number of people fighting against tyranny, and it placed this country in a position to assist the world, as it did later, to make the world safe for democracy.

In the immediate press of our daily affairs, we are apt to overlook certain important days in our nation's history such as this anniversary. We should not forget that we owe a debt of gratitude to the men who volunteered for the cause of our country 25 years ago and went forth to uphold and defend those principles for which our country stands.

Oakland is a city of patriotic people, and I know that, in calling the attention of our people to the anniversary, they will spare a brief time for the observance and memory of those men who offered themselves in the cause of freedom 25 years ago.

Dried Germs of Genius?
(By Arthur Brooks Baker)
You know what I mean. You live in a house with somebody with an undeveloped talent, a dream almost realized.
That person has the seeds of success, germs of genius. He, she. Husband, son, wife, daughter. Or it may be you.
PERSONALITY is simply possibilities developed. It is the sum of the seeds that sprouted, were cultivated, grew.
Here is the picture of a man of PERSONALITY. Study it.

Orlando Edgar Miller, Ph.D.
President of the International Society of Applied Psychology
A man of ability, you say. But everybody has ability, some more than others, all much more than they use.
Orlando E. Miller has ability developed. That's PERSONALITY.
... come in thousands to look and listen.
You've heard him praised? PERSONALITY always wins praise.
You've heard him cursed? Envy never loses its tongue.
And you—have you won your share of recognition? Have you marked up your score of achievement?
EVERY LIVING THING GROWS AND SEEKS MORE GROWTH. IF YOU ARE NOT GROWING YOUR ARE DYING.
Make yourself a growing, enriching, unfolding PERSONALITY.
Orlando E. Miller is to give ten free lectures on the growth of PERSONALITY.
He will tell you what it means in relation to Self-Reliance, Power, Popularity, Love, Home Life, Freedom, Genius, Happiness, Success.
He not only knows his subject, but he IS his subject.
When one who KNOWS takes the time to TELL, progressive minds find time to listen.

HOAX ADMITTED AS SUCCOR IS RUSHED TO ISLE

"Tobacco Rebellion" Caused Men to Report Starving of Wood Cutters.

NORTHPORT Mich., April 21.—Edward Horn, one of three men who risked their lives to travel across slush ice and open water early this week, and who reported nine men and a woman on South Fox island were in danger of starvation, resulting in six airplanes being rushed to this part of the State to relieve the supposed sufferers, today admitted to newspaper men that his story was a hoax.

Horn admitted the starvation tale was part of a plan to obtain tobacco for the woodcutters on the island.

"A tobacco rebellion" against Nels Ask, foreman of the camp, prompted the tale, Horn said. The wood cutters suffering through a month's abstinence from tobacco and believing Ask had a supply for himself and would not share with them, delegated Horn and his two companions to cross the ice, tell that the colony would not exist more than a week unless help came and depend upon the expected food supplies to include rations of tobacco.

Northport has been the key point in the aerial effort to carry supplies to the islanders whose plight first was reported Wednesday by Horn and two companions.

Planes of the United States army of the mail service, of commercial companies and of individuals took the air in a race to succor the islanders.

Disaster rode on the fuselage of the army planes. The first ship which flew from Selfridge field Mount Clemens, crashed through the ice in attempting a landing at Northport and was not pulled from the water until last night. The second Selfridge plane wrecked its landing gear in landing near [illegible] yesterday.

One plane reached the island and is still there. It is the craft piloted by John Miller and carrying supplies from Wilson and company Chicago packers. The machine after dropping food was crippled in attempting to land.

The plane which successfully landed supplies on the island and returned to the mainland was piloted by Lieut. H. E. Woodridge. A third Chicago plane, piloted by E. Hamilton Lee of the mail service, lost its bearings and landed at Charlevoix last night.

In Bay Point the officers arrested Peter Belhome and at the Country Inn, at San Pablo, Chester Gray and Maud Foster were arrested. Frank Starkey, proprietor of the Jefferson hotel at El Cerrito was another victim of the raiders. No one was taken into custody, citations being left for all persons.

LODI, April 21.—If present indications are any criterion Attorney Glen West will succeed G. M. Steele as city attorney. He is willing. Steele's resignation is in the hands of the city trustees but they refuse to comment on it. Steele says he is retiring to devote himself to his private practice. Several [illegible] resign, but was prevailed on to remain as certain important matters pertaining to the town required his personal attention. At that time, however, West was offered the job before it was known whether Steele would remain or not. He was ready to take it when circumstances alter the case.

CURTAIN CALLS

By WOOD SOANES

LEE SHUBERT has prepared a screed for general consumption on the importance of the leading woman in productions and incidently takes occasion to pay a tribute to Belle Bennett, not so long since a dramatic stock favorite in San Francisco.

"Many a time I have seen a play which had intrinsic merit in itself and a cast that was otherwise commendable topple to the ground because the leading woman wasn't the kind of strong woman who could bear the burden of the play on her shoulders," says Shubert.

"It is really more vital for the success of a play that the leading woman be attractive than that the leading man be the recipient of bales of mash notes. The women patrons, while approving of good leading men, prefer most of all to think of themselves as the woman who is the object of all that interesting love-making.

"The men patrons on the other hand don't think themselves into the leading man's shoes except in so far as he has the enticing opportunity to make love to such a stunning girl. In a word the real essence of romance in a play is concentrated in the heroine.

TWENTY SEASONS AGO TODAY

Mrs. Patrick Campbell is at the Macdonald playing "The Joy of Living," "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" and "Magda."

"So often an actress who will do splendidly in one type of part will fade to a shadow in another. 'Happy-Go-Lucky' a couple of seasons ago had three changes in the leading feminine role both on the road and here before it seemed to get into working order.

"Belle Bennett, the girl who was finally chosen appeared to lift this pleasing comedy to deserved success in Chicago, but she was in the part here only a couple of weeks before the play drifted out of New York."

Selwyn Discusses Dramatic Critics In re "Kreisler"

Edgar Selwyn, New York producer, is peeved at the dramatic critics in his immediate neighborhood and says so in a statement issued this week in the interests of [illegible] play. [illegible] must be said that there is a deal of merit in the remarks of the producer, who believes that the time will come when dramatic critics cease to function if the present condition obtains.

"There is no form of amusement in which the public is so interested as the theater," says Selwyn. "It is, therefore, as important that [illegible] it is that they run a sports department. But it doesn't help the public and it doesn't help the newspaper to continue a campaign of destructiveness for a play just because it does not suit the taste of a single individual.

"While I realize that the dramatic critic has some standards by which to judge a production he ignores these standards when a play offends his personal [illegible]. I would like to use one of our productions for an example.

FORTY SEASONS AGO TODAY

"The Ticket-of-Leave Man" is at Baldwin's theater with W. H. Thompson, George Osburne, George Holland, Louise Sylvester, Amelia Waugh, Ida May and Charles Norris in the cast.

"Just before Christmas we produced in the Apollo an importation which cost around $100,000. It was 'Johannes Kreisler.' Each member of my firm had seen it in Berlin and we all agreed that the American public would welcome a [illegible] so beautiful. So we spent $[illegible] to construct the specially built stage alone.

"We employed Fokine of the Metropolitan to direct the ballet and Max [illegible] [illegible] weeks rehearsing and at the expense of [illegible]

"Now what happened? The critics of the daily press attended the opening [illegible] a vision that they allowed their consciousness of an uneven [illegible] critical production to submerge the appreciation of the beauty of Johannes Kreisler. [illegible] were [illegible] Were the theater was [illegible] filled for three months it was at the $3 scale [illegible] [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] that the public should have been given some [illegible] on Johannes Kreisler was and left to judge for itself whether or not it was worth the higher scale of prices necessary to keep it alive."

Lenore Ulric's new play has been finished by Edward Sheldon. It will probably not be presented until 1925, however, as Miss Ulric expects to continue with "Kiki" for about that length of time.

Basil McDonald Hastings and A. S. M. Hutchinson, who collaborated on the adaptation of the latter's book, "If Winter Comes," have both written original plays for presentation in London this season. Hastings contributes "Any Woman Would" and Hutchinson, "Some Folk of Alexander."

Alice Joyce has been selected to play opposite George Arliss in the picture version of "The Green Goddess."

$50,000 SUIT AGAIN PRESSED IN SAMOA CASE

Richmond Man Files a New Case Against Ex-Governor of Pacific Island.

His former suit having been quashed in the United States district court, San Francisco, Samuel S. Ripley of Richmond, who claims descent from a Samoan prince, has filed another suit in Chicago against W. A. MacDonald and Waldo Evans, former governor of Samoa and now commandant of the Great Lakes naval training station near Chicago.

According to word from Chicago, the suit filed there asks $50,000 damages and makes similar allegations to the suit which was originally filed in the superior court at Martinez on March 28, 1922, later transferred to San Francisco on motion of Evans, and on May 29, 1922, was quashed. The suits grow out of allegations that Ripley was prevented by Evans and MacDonald from landing in Samoa two years ago.

It was in August, 1921, that Ripley arrived at Pago Pago, Samoa, on the steamer Sonoma and was denied admission by Governor Evans on the ground that his visit was connected with a threatened revolt by certain native chiefs. This was denied by Ripley, who claims his visit was to his parents and only of a personal nature. Ripley claims he was kept a prisoner on shore until the steamer was ready to sail and then placed on board and taken to Australia.

Ripley remained on the ship, it was reported, and returned to Samoa but was again denied admission. Returning to his home in Richmond Ripley instituted the suit which was subsequently quashed. Ripley also lodged complaints with the government.

Wednesday Morning Club Gives Concert

The concert of the Wednesday Morning Choral last evening at Ebell clubhouse under the direction of Paul Steindorff was [illegible] before a large and enthusiastic audience.

The program prepared by Director Steindorff proved to be one of the most popular presented. The last number rendered "Fantasy on a Russian Folk Song," of Samuel Gaines, with violin obligato by Harry Tallman was specially brought here by Steindorff for the concert. The selection recently won a prize in New York.

Three varied numbers of Rubenstein, Tschaikowsky and Moskowski were excellently rendered by the Musicus trio, Vernal Deane, cello; Harry Tallman, violin, and Wilhelmina Woltheus, piano. Miss Woolheus also played 'Valse Brillante' by Marie Zucca, in which her ability as a musician was readily recognized.

Robert Romani, baritone, also gave a program especially appreciated because it was different from [illegible] ice and Miss Doris Schnabel Lowell were soloists from the club.

Missing the little child the mother enlisted the aid of the entire mine crew in the search. Two hours later, at a considerable distance, and near the Francis mine, Walter Lines mill man at the mine found the body. [illegible] of the mine crew recovered it from the water.

Harding Tact Is Found Necessary To Appease Boy

YORK, Pa., April 21.—There are some things that even the president can't do—at least and preserve the dignity of his high office.

Walter Dickinson Hague, seven-year-old son of the Rev. Dr. Walter Dickinson of York, learned this today and his prodding ambition to be a policeman went the way of most boyhood dreams.

The other day when he was refused a job on the York force he resolved to appeal to a higher authority, his cousin. And in this case his cousin happened to be the President of the United States. President Harding replied promptly:

"Dear Walter: I am afraid the York authorities would be doubtful about the right to intrude in this matter.

"I feel sure that a boy as big as you are ought to be thoroughly competent, but it is a little hard to get the regulations in such matters waived.

"I think the best thing for you to do is to wait until you grow about two feet taller and then you will probably be able to get on the force if you still want to do so."

Lodi May Receive Gift of Large Park

LODI, April 21.—W. G. Micke, a wealthy shipper of this district recently stated that he may deed to the city of Lodi for a municipal park 60 acres of land located about three miles out of Lodi and known as Pixley's grove. The terms of the contract, however, would not allow him to make this gift at the present time [illegible] [illegible] gested by local citizens that a lease be taken on the property until such time as Mr. Micke is in a position to deed the land to the city.

If Lodi secures the land it will be made into one of the finest parks and recreation grounds in California. There will be a golf course, tennis courts, an artificial lake, a swimming tank, a place for [illegible].

The proposition is in tentative form at the present time. Civic organizations will be asked to [illegible] help.

SCHOOL BONDS ADVISORY BODY ASKED TO MEET

Will some one please page the Public Education Bond Advisory committee? The chairman wants it on the job in the board of education rooms next Friday.

Call after call has been sent out in the last three weeks according to the chairman, Mrs. C. E. Wilson, but the members of the committee have been busy somewhere else and a quorum was hard to find. A call for a meeting last week brought but three members and no meeting could be held.

Mrs. Wilson asserts that the time has come to do something toward evolving a school bond issue.

"Failing in every other way to get a quorum," says Mrs. Wilson, "I am issuing a public call through the press, so that the members who have failed to see our official notices may perhaps read it in the paper."

A good deal of business, according to Mrs. Wilson, awaits the committee when it convenes.

U. S. AND MEXICO DRAW CLOSER TO FRIENDLY PACT

Recognition of Obregon Said to Be Imminent; Hughes Is Silent.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—(By the Associated Press.)—A public announcement regarding relations with Mexico was said today by authorized administration spokesmen to be expected within a few days. Any statement on the question at this time, it was added, probably would be embarrassing and might endanger the success of an undertaking now in the stage of final adjustment.

Renewed assurances regarding the protection of the rights of foreigners in the southern republic, which all along has been the chief stumbling block in the way of recognition of Obregon by this government, have been sent to Washington and apparently have been received by officials here as an important step in the right direction.

The views of Washington on the subject have been made known to Charge Summerlin of the American embassy in Mexico City and discussions are in progress there which are expected to lead to a public announcement within a few days.

Ever since 1921, a draft treaty, proposing a renewal of relations between Washington and Mexico and involving recognition of the Obregon regime by the United States has been in Summerlin's hands, awaiting signature at the moment satisfactory guarantees have been given in regard to American rights.

Whether that time has come, officials here will not say.

It is known, however that legislation pending in the Mexican chamber of deputies designed to so apply Article 27 of the Mexican constitution that it will not be retroactive, is regarded by Obregon officials at least as embodying the sort of guarantee the United States has requested. That opinion has been made known to this government through the Mexican embassy here in a comprehensive restatement of the whole Mexican side of the case.

Sunday Tribune Obtains Notable News Features

THROUGH the medium of its exclusive cable and telegraph service, tomorrow's TRIBUNE will present a large number of new features of unusual merit. Measuring up to the high standards set during the past several months, The Sunday TRIBUNE'S special European writers have contributed noteworthy articles on the Ruhr, the British governmental crisis and other problems.

Andre Tardieu, French commissioner to America during the war and a leading political authority in his country, delivers a scathing attack on Poincare for not adopting the sternest kind of measures to force Berlin to capitulate and the Rhineland industrialists to end their resistance. Paralleling this policy, Maximilian Harden, Germany's leading publicist, denounces his government for constantly debating and taking no measures to end the trouble.

Other notable contributions for the Sunday readers concern: Bonar Law's future, scientific tests to decide if low shoes cause large ankles, the bootleggers' death toll, proposals to sidetrack Coolidge, Gifford Pinchot's troubles with the remnants of the Penrose machine, the probability of criminal prosecutions regarding the increasing of sugar prices and other steps to relieve the consumer, the unusual news features of the week in New York, financial and industrial developments of the past week and predictions for the future, social events and styles in the national capital, and several other topics of wide interest.

PAN-AMERICAN PARLEY TIED UP ON CONSTITUTION

Delegates Unable to Decide On U. S. Proposal for Postponing Issue.

SANTIAGO, Chile, April 21 (By the Associated Press).—The subcommittee of the political committee of the Pan-American Conference appointed to determine what should be done in view of the deadlock between the United States and the Central American and Antilles republics on the question of the constitution of the Pan-American Union, failed to make progress after two hours of discussion last night.

Inability to obtain a unanimous decision on the United States' proposal to postpone the question "for further consideration of the governments interested," has led to predictions that the minority report will be presented.

An inference that the United States sought hegemony over the Latin-American nations" in wanting to keep the diplomatic representatives accredited to the United States as members of the governing board of the Pan-American Union, is reported to have been made by Alvaro Quiroz of Costa Rica.

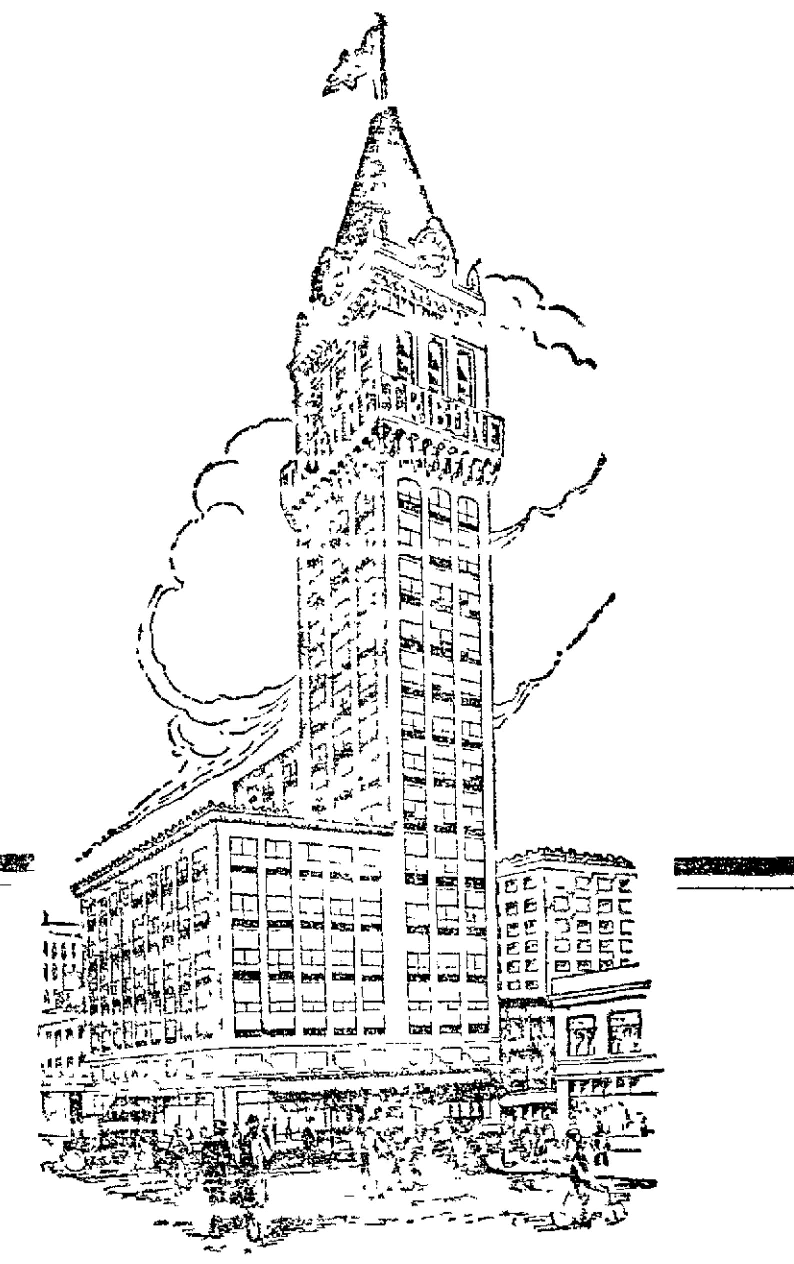

Henry P. Fletcher, setting forth the position of the United States declared the arrangement proposed for dual representation on the board through both a special representative and a diplomat "would lead to inevitable confusion in the Pan-American relations of my government."

Legion Is Urged To Aid Boy Scouts

SALINAS, April 21.—Dr. T. C. Edwards spoke last evening at a joint meeting of Salinas Post, No. 31, American Legion, and the Legion Auxiliary, his subject being "The American Boy Scouts and What They Stand For." Homer I. Hayward, president of the Salinas Rotarians, also addressed the joint gathering in behalf of a bigger and better Boy Scout troop here.

The post decided to get behind the Boy Scouts with the object of assisting in building up the organization.

THREE COLLAPSE IN TIME DANCE AT WASHINGTON

Two Women and a Man Are Victims of Marathon Craze in Capital.

WASHINGTON, April 21 (By the Associated Press).—The grimmer side of America's dancing record vogue loomed up today when three victims, a man and two women, were sent to a hospital here after collapsing at the end of about forty-eight hours of dancing in one of the two contests now under way in the capital.

Miss Florence Gentry, 19, one of the victims, collapsed on the floor of one of the dance halls shortly before last midnight and was assisted from the floor, exhausted and hysterical. Examining physicians ordered that she be sent to a hospital.

About an hour later two others, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Mendenhall, who had been dancing in the same contest, which began Wednesday night, collapsed and were sent to the hospital for observation.

Attending physicians said they believed the three were suffering only from acute exhaustion, but said they intended to keep them under observation for any other effects of the dance-record venture. Sleep was being given its way today as a curative agent.

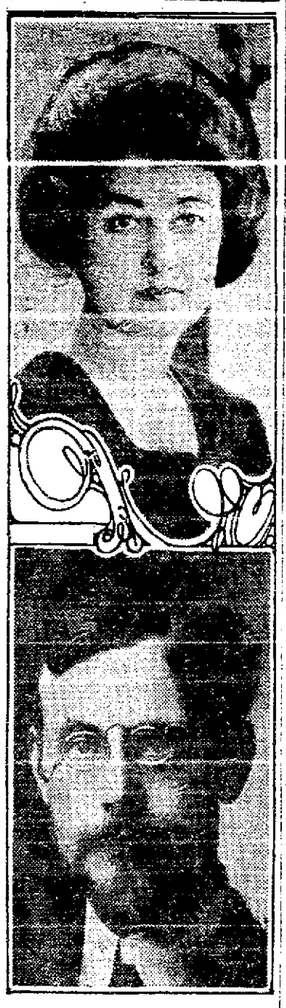

Undismayed by the result for these three participants, six of the original 37 entries in the two contests here, one of them a woman, Mrs. Elsie Weber, who established in Baltimore last week what was then a record of 57 hours, were still on their feet today.

One of the remaining contestants is Aubrey Gilbert, a marine from Clarksdale, Miss., who was pronounced in "fighting form" by marine officers from the barracks here who examined him last night and told him not to report until he captured the "bacon." Gilbert and his dancing partner, Josef Bolstrosky, former cavalryman, now have the floor to themselves at the larger hall, where 26 started.

If any of the six are still going at midnight the dance hall managements have made arrangements to transport them in buses across the Potomac to Virginia to escape the prohibition against the opening of dance halls here on Sunday. Phonographs will be packed along in the buses so there will be nothing to interrupt the Marathon shuffle.

DEPEW HAS NEW ANECDOTE FOR 89TH BIRTHDAY

NEW YORK, April 21.—Chauncey M. Depew, whose 89th birthday anniversary will be celebrated next Monday, is back in New York from Florida today with a new Lincoln anecdote.

The story has it that a woman friend of the Lincolns went to the President late in the war with the complaint that her son, a West Point graduate, continually failed of promotion, although civilians, aided by Congressmen or Senators, were rapidly being sent ahead in the army.

"My dear woman," Lincoln was said to have replied, "your son is not the only one in just that fix. I hear of them every week. The trouble is with the Senate. They won't do anything for anyone but civilians. Leave your son's case with me.

"The only way I can get him promotion is to sandwich his name in with five civilians, for it seems that only when five civilians are promoted can a West Point man get consideration from the Senators, and then he can't get through unless he goes in with the five, all in a bunch."

The West Pointer was promoted in precisely the way Lincoln suggested.

STRAITS BRIDGE PLANS APPROVED

Approval of the plan of John L. Harrington for the erection of a bridge across Dumbarton straits was given yesterday at a meeting attended by representatives of chambers of commerce in Alameda and San Mateo counties.

According to Harrington's plans, the bridge will be erected across the straits three quarters of a mile north of the Southern Pacific cutoff.

Otto von Geldern, civil engineer representing the A. Schilling company, protested the proposed site on the ground that it would injure the Schilling properties in Alameda county at the mouth of the Beard slough.

His arguments were answered by other engineers who expressed the belief that the terminal might be moved a short distance south of the slough instead of north of it so that the entrance to the creek would not be obstructed.

The meeting was called by Colonel Herbert Deakyne, of the engineer corps of the United States Army and was attended by the following representatives who spoke on the matter:

J. B. Balcomb, engineer; Attorney F. C. Drew, who presented resolutions and indorsements from a dozen or more chambers of commerce, improvement clubs and similar organizations; F. H. Drake of the San Carlos Chamber of Commerce and San Mateo County Dumbarton Bridge Association; A. M. Catheart, mayor of Palo Alto; F. B. Jones of Niles, who spoke for the Bridge the Bay Association; A. E. Roth of Stanford University, who dwelt on the advantages of a bridge to persons attending football games at Palo Alto; Supervisor John McBain of San Mateo county; Fred G. Cartwright, San Francisco engineer; H. B. Toll, Morgan Oyster Company; and the following representatives of chambers of commerce: J. H. Sullivan of Menlo Park, C. S. James of Niles, Frank S. Veit of Newark, F. T. Dusterberry of Centerville, F. M. Drew of Niles, C. A. Speers of Palo Alto, D. K. Trask of Redwood City and R. R. Waterbury of Ravenswood.

Contractor Will Test New Ordinance

The ordinance recently adopted by the city council, regulating the construction of garages, will come under fire Monday in the police court at the hearing of the first case of alleged violation of the ordinance, according to Attorneys Rose and Silverstein, attorneys for Contractor S. W. Jones.

Some time ago Jones started remodeling a garage at 2420 Telegraph avenue, being granted a permit by the city building department. The Second Church of Christ, Scientist, protested. The city council revoked the garage permit and then adopted an ordinance regulating the construction or altering of garages or cleaning establishments near churches or public buildings.

Contractor Jones went right ahead with his building. He was arrested today, charged with violating the city ordinance. The case comes up Monday before Police Judge Hennessey.

MOTHER OF LARGE FAMILY

Recommends Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to Other Mothers

Windom, Minn.—"I was so run-down that I was just good for nothing. I was to become the mother of my ninth child, and I thought I did not have the strength to go through with it. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has surely done all I could ask it to do and I am telling all my friends about it. I have a nice big baby girl and am feeling fine. You may use this letter to help other sick mothers."—Mrs. C. A. MOEDE, Box 634 Windom, Minn.

My First Child

Glen Allen, Ala.—"I have been greatly benefited by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for bearing-down feelings and pains. I was troubled in this way for nearly four years following the birth of my first child, and at times could hardly stand on my feet. A neighbor recommended the Vegetable Compound to me after I had taken doctor's medicines without much benefit. It has relieved my pains and gives me strength. I recommend it and give you permission to use my testimonial letter."—Mrs. Ida RYE, Glen Allen, Alabama.

LINDSEY WOULD HAVE FLAPPERS TEACH PARENTS

LOS ANGELES, April 21.—The boys and girls of today know more than their parents and ought to be teaching their parents, Judge Ben B. Lindsey, who has arrived here for a lecture tour.

"I believe in schools where parents of today will have their education brought up to date by flappers and their socalled cake-eater sons," said Judge Lindsey.

"I've already started a school like that and have four flappers in charge of it.

"This would be a terrible world if children did not disobey their parents. The world's progress is due to the disobedience of children."

Here, There and Everywhere in the Eastbay

A TRIBUNE reader wants to know if the public will crown him for sending in this quotation attributed to Tut when they dragged him out of his grave: "This is tomb much." Shall we let the punishment fit the crime?

Abe Martin

Th' trouble with a wealthy an' prominent home lovin' clubman is that we never kin tell who's home he's goin' to' take a notion to. Next t' a released penitentiary invalid nobuddy gits well as quick as th' feller that sells out on account o' poor health.

Good Substitute.

A local jazz hound says he doesn't mind the ban on jazz. Henceforth he and the members of his club will hold their dances in a boiler factory.

Hardly.

An Alameda wag sends this one in to "Here, There and Everywhere": "The Chinese who wrote his will on the back of a lottery ticket wasn't taking any chances on dying intestate."

Pep For Tut.

King Tut dances are the rage.
But Tut is buried his old age
The does should take old Tut in hand
And jazz him with a modern gland.

Rest In Peace!

Clang the cowbell, swat the drum,
The King of Jazz will soon be dumb!
Sweet rest, when all the cans are canned.
And every fuzzy band is banned!

My husband never pays the rent until we get the third notice from the landlord.—Emma L. S.

What Does Your Husband Do?

Probably.

A Berkeley anti-noise reformer says the ban on jazz looks as though it might be the work of the society for the suppression of Unnecessary Noise.

Grounds for Divorce.

In filing suit for a divorce a woman recently said that her husband made her eat butter so she would become plump. A local cynic says it's just another case of taking a life partner "for butter or for worse."

And Kettle Drums?

Professional musicians are said to be deserting jazz for popular music. An Eastbay hardware merchant says he looks for a falling off in the sale of pots and pans.

His Idea of It.

An Eastbay observer says he doesn't see why butter should be cited as grounds for divorce. He points out that marriage is often a mere question of bread and butter anyway.

PASTOR OF LOS ANGELES WILL SPEAK APRIL 30

Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher of Los Angeles will deliver a lecture on the subject "Can Coue Make Us Better and Better?" at the Auditorium theater on Monday evening, April 30. Dr. Brougher will appear here under the auspices of the Oakland Ministerial Union.

Those who have heard the Coue lecture agree that it is the greatest pronouncement from Dr. Brougher in recent years. He is a preacher second to none in the power of presenting facts in a sledge-hammer manner. He is entertaining not for the fun of entertainment, but only in order to assure his auditor's attention, so that he may drive home the great truths of his subject.

Trip in Holy Land Subject For Lecture

Tomorrow evening at the First Christian church Dr. Harvey O. Breeden will deliver the last of his series of lectures on "Through the Holy Land on Horseback." LENROOT HITS BLOCS AS BEING AGAINST PEOPLE

Wisconsin Senator Gives His Advice to Berkeley Public Spirit Club.

BERKELEY, April 21.—Attacking the "bloc" system which he declared controlled congress, and urging the election of representatives who would think of the welfare of the entire country instead of selfish interests, Senator Irving L. Lenroot, for 15 years a member of congress, yesterday addressed the Berkeley Public Spirit club at its weekly luncheon at the Varsity Candy shop.

The senator declared that in addition to the levying of taxes and the expending of public moneys it was the function of government to guarantee to each person an equal opportunity and to keep open the field of competition. He said that one of the evils of government was the tendency of groups or sections to exact impossible advantages or special privileges. He declared that he feared that system of party government which had been built up was beginning to break down, because both parties he said had a tendency when framing their platforms to give attention to getting votes rather than defining the principles for which they stand.

"From this condition," said the senator, "there looms on the horizon what we now choose to term the bloc by which vocations or sections combine for their selfish interest. Ever since I have been in congress we have had the tariff bloc and the southern bloc and now we have the labor bloc and the farm bloc; if this keeps on there will develop, I believe, from the unorganized, a bloc which will have for its purpose the welfare of all the people.

"During the last session there was passed in congress more farm legislation than was passed all the rest of the time I have been there, but I do not concede that it was accomplished by what is known as the farm bloc, composed, as someone has said of twenty lawyers and [illegible] can cure the bloc system by refusing to support for congress the man who yields to the demands of any bloc as against the interests of all the people."

Pioneer Citizen of Ygnacio Valley Dies

WALNUT CREEK, April 21.—Frank Fremont Reed, 66, a native of Wisconsin, and a resident of Ygnacio Valley for many years, died at his home Sunday night.

Those who survive the deceased are his son, Frank Fremont Reed Jr., and three brothers, Dr. L. A. Reed of Oakland, W. H. Reed of Healdsburg, R. G. Reed of Seattle, and two sisters, Mrs. L. M. Towner of Los Angeles and Mrs. Emma Dream of Illinois.

First Presbyterian

"Our Lord's Return and Our Departed Friends" is the subject for the evening sermon by Dr. Frank Silsley tomorrow at the First Presbyterian church. This is the third in the series of sermons on the general topic "Things in the Great Hereafter."

Speaking of this sermon, Dr. Silsley said: "The subject of our Lord's return has been given many a fanatic interpretation. Some of these interpretations have tended to divide Christendom and promote the spirit of schism. What is needed is a sane and scriptural view of this great promise. Unquestionably the Lord's return is taught in the scriptures, but what is its application?"

Dr. Silsley will discuss the following questions: Why did our Lord promise to come back to earth? What is the purpose of his coming? If Christ comes back what will happen in modern city conditions? What would happen at Mountain View cemetery and our crematories? Is the promise of Christ's return to frighten or to comfort us?

The Temple choir, under the direction of Walter R. Kennedy, will present two anthems, "And I Saw Another Angel," for tenor solo, unison bass and full chorus, and "Savior, When Night Involves the Skies" for bass solo, quartet and full chorus. At the organ recital closing the service W. R. Kennedy will play three selections by Andante.

At the morning service Dr. Silsley will give the third in the series of sermons concerning the different groups at the cross, the subject being "The Commercialists at the Cross."

Swedish Church English Service Is Emphasized

Rev. A. E. Lind, the pastor, will speak tomorrow evening on "The Resurrection in the Valley of Dry Bones" at the Emmanuel Swedish M. E. church. The choir, under W. W. Sandholdt, director, will assist in making this service of special interest to the English speaking public.

At the morning service Rev. Lind will speak on "Exercising the Christian Goodness." This is the only service in this church when the Swedish language is used.

Dr. A. C. Stevens, president of the National Training School, will be the speaker at a series of "Better Life" services, commencing next Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. Dr. Stevens will speak also on Thursday and Friday evenings. Next Sunday, April 29, Dr. Stevens will speak at both the morning and evening services. Music will be provided by the church choir and Dr. Stevens, soloist.

SOLONS ADJOURN FOR NAPA TRIP

SACRAMENTO, April 21. — Too much enthusiasm for labor led to depleted legislature energies yesterday, with the result that the house and senate equalized their long hours of the past week, the senate meeting for about an hour, and the assembly holding only an afternoon session. Neither house passed any contested matters, but the senate passed 22 assembly bills and sent them either back for amendment or to the governor for signature. The assembly dealt only with its own bills, and passed a half dozen. Included in these was one by Carter of Los Angeles providing for a six months period of redemption on trust deeds.

Both houses adjourned until Monday, when the assembly will resume consideration of the governor's budget bill, as a special order of business. Today the members will visit Napa county, on the invitation of citizens there conveyed to them by Assemblyman Frank L. Coombs.

Couple in Vallejo Tell of Betrothal

VALLEJO, April 21.—The engagement of George Herbert and Miss Eugenia Crawford, both of this city, has been announced. The wedding will be held some time in June.

First Unitarian

"Thinking Backward and Looking Forward" will be the subject of the sermon by Rev. Clarence Reed Sunday at 11 a. m. According to Mr. Reed the greatest danger to modern civilization is not reactionary or radical ideas in politics or industry, but a reactionary church. Our age needs clarity of vision, the courage of conviction and heroic devotion to ideals and values of supreme worth.

An institute for religious education will be held by the Unitarian churches of central California in the First Unitarian church of Berkeley from Thursday, April 26, to May 2. There will be a course of lectures daily at 4:10 p. m. by Professor Charles E. Rugh of the University of California on "How to Teach Religion." Another course will be given by Dr. Florence Buck of Boston on "Bible Drama and Church Pageantry" at 8:30 p. m. All persons interested in the subject of religious education are invited to attend.

A public meeting in the interest of religious education will be held Sunday, April 29, in the First Unitarian church of Oakland at 7:30 p. m. A pageant entitled "The Renewal of Life" will be given by children and young people. The pageant will be followed by addresses by President Arcelia H. Reinhardt on the subject: "Youth and the Untraveled World", and Professor Edward M. Hulme of Stanford University on "The Training and Directing of Youth."

ONE-MAN STREET CARS SUBJECT OF CONFERENCE

Berkeley Council Considers Question for College City's Lines.

BERKELEY, April 20.—A conference on a plan to install one-man street cars in Berkeley has been called by members of the city council as the result of a proposal submitted yesterday by the San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways.

Plans to burn the present antiquated cars on the Ashby avenue and Dwight way cross-town lines and to install one-man cars at a ten-minute interval instead of the twelve-minute schedule now in effect were placed before the council in a communication received yesterday from W. R. Alberger, head of the traction company.

According to Alberger the cars will be operated with two men during the busy portions of the day and with one man at other times.

"I'm willing to allow one-man cars in Berkeley provided we are given assurance of adequate service," declared Councilman Charles D. Heywood, principal opponent of one-man cars in the college city. "So far all we have had is promises. If the traction company will give us assurance in black and white that our service will be improved that will be another matter."

On motion of Councilman Heywood the installation of one-man cars was referred to the council meeting in committee of the whole for further consideration. Although one-man cars are allowed in Oakland and other bay cities, the Berkeley council has consistently fought their installation in the college city since their introduction several years ago.

MAURICE HERR WILL GIVE HIS ADDRESS AGAIN

The International Bible Students' association announces that Maurice L. Herr, who last Sunday lectured on "Satan's Empire Falling—Millions Now Living Will Never Die," has been prevailed upon to repeat his lecture tomorrow evening in Odd Fellows' hall.

The lecture is excellently illustrated by colored pictures. Herr states that the experience of last Sunday, when hundreds were turned away, has been the unusual thing in recent months, but he is seldom able to give a repeat lecture because of the numerous demands for his services. His present appointments run well into the summer.

Mills Head Speaks At Vesper Service

President Aurelia Henry Reinhardt will give the last of her series of Sunday evening vesper addresses in Lisser Hall, Mills College tomorrow evening. She will speak on "The Two Voices—Alfred Tennyson."

Among the topics considered during the spring have been "The Religious Message of Robert Browning," and "God in Nature—William Wordsworth." The service will be held at 7 o'clock and will be vested choir under the direction of Mrs. Lauretta V. Sweesy.

What's Happening in the Motor World

by Jim Houlihan

With approximately seven and one-half inches of rain having fallen since April 1, the opening of the park to automobile travel has had to be deferred from time to time, and even yet weather conditions appear unsettled and it is impossible to forecast just when it will be practicable to throw the Wawona road open to travel. The road was freed from snow during the first few days of the month and was found to have suffered little from the winter storms. In spite of the rain, the road within the park was ready for travel but the Chowchilla mountain section outside of the park was still very wet and sticky. This latter condition was made still worse by the rain and (in the higher elevations) snow of the 17th and 18th, making it practically impossible. Under the sunshine of the 19th and 20th, however, it is drying rapidly and with continued clear weather should be readily passable by the 25th and in good condition by the first of May.

The same holds for the Mount Lodge route.

So far as the road between the valley and the Mariposa Grove is concerned, right now, in spite of the heavy rains, it is readily passable and should be in first-class condition by the 25th, and unless most unfavorable weather conditions prevail, it will be declared officially open on that date. In the meantime while travel is not encouraged, those wishing to make the trip into the park by motor will be permitted to use the road.

Scheduled opening dates for other roads in the park are as follows:

Big Oak Flat road, June 1, but will probably open considerably earlier on account of light snow conditions as compared with normal.

Glacier Point Road, June 15; may open earlier.

Tioga Road, July 15, should open earlier this year, possibly by July 1.

W. B. LEWIS, Superintendent.

School Will Be Kept Up Six Weeks

Beginning Monday, April 23, and continuing every Monday night for six weeks, the Interdenominational Training School for Vacation School Workers will open its doors at 7 o'clock. Teachers of experience have been secured for all subjects. The class in "administration" will be conducted by Rev. C. L. Duncan of the Presbyterian board. He will discuss the best methods of conducting a vacation school.

There will be a class on music taught by Mrs. C. D. Cooke, choir leader at Melrose Baptist church. Those in this class will be instructed in the science of leading the singing.

The art of telling the Bible story will be demonstrated by Miss Ada Rose Demerest. One of the most important subjects to be taken up will be that of Bible memory and expressional work. Attractive ways of presenting Bible verses and of "learning through doing" will be shown by Mrs. Norman F. Turner and Mrs. Ora V. Shultz, teachers of many years' experience. The dramatization of Bible and missionary stories and hymns will be presented by Mrs. George Thomas, who is specializing in this kind of work. "Americanization" will be presented in a definite, practical way by Miss Naomi Fletcher.

Three special teachers for those who work with boys have been secured: W. A. Kearns, physical director of the Y. M. C. A. for recreational work; Charles DaVega of the Y. M. C. A. for first aid and F. W. Barnett of the Piedmont schools for boys' craft and radio.

Two classes in reed work will be conducted, an elementary class by Mrs. John Farley and an advanced class by John Borglum. Other classes especially designed for girls' workers are: Sewing and fancy-work, Miss Ruth McDonald; raffia work and novelties, Mrs. J. V. Morris; bead work, Mrs. A. Snyder; mat work, Mrs. J. A. Lewis; millinery, Miss A. Ballard, and paper flower work, Mrs. N. A. Cransby.

All teachers expecting to work in the kindergarten and primary departments should take the course under Miss Mary Moore and her assistants.

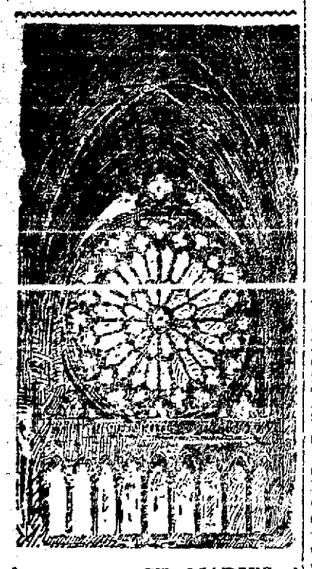

This training school is set up primarily for vacation school workers, but is open to any worker with children who desires instruction.

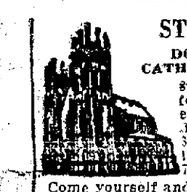

"Hyperallon Class" First Over Top in Church Race

In the recent "Mountain Climbing" contest in which Sunday School classes of the First Methodist Episcopal church participated the Hyperallon class was first "over the top." Keen rivalry developed from the start, the Paramounts pushing the Hyperallons closely. Robert L. Davies is the Hyperallon class' teacher.

Sunday School Auto Race Sends Attendance High

THE Sunday School of the Golden Gate Baptist church is taxing the capacity of the building. Some weeks ago the school put on a contest, using the plan called "The Lincoln Highway Sunday School Auto Race." Every member took an interest from the start, and soon the enthusiasm rose to white heat. The younger members of the school did such vigorous work that the attendance is about doubled. The class rooms are crowded, and the school in general session fills the auditorium.

One of the features of the contest is an occasional social in honor of the class making the fastest time, and in this some of the parents are taking an active interest. An effort is being made to secure the co-operation of fathers and mothers in the work of the school. There are some very encouraging signs, and everybody is interested and encouraged.

The Chinese were taking tribute in pearls more than 2300 years before the Christian era.

Has the Camera Disproved HEAVEN?

IF it is true that man can now communicate with departed spirits—even photograph them—has he thereby established a contact with heaven? Or, is the "heaven" of your childhood understanding a mere myth? If there is no literal "hell" can there be a literal "heaven"? WHERE were Moses and Elijah before and after the transfiguration? "Heaven!—where is it"?—a question teeming with interest while men and mediums produce evidence to disprove the Christian conception of a hereafter. Hear it discussed by John Snape, in this church tomorrow night at 7:45. Dorothy Dukes Dimm, 'cellist, will play Popper's "Elsentanz." Eileen Almstead Piggott, sweet soprano, will sing Lansing's "Cast Thy Burden Upon the Lord."

TOMORROW MORNING

Baptist Young People Anticipate Convention In Northern California

The young people in the Baptist churches of the bay district are anticipating the coming of the northern California Baptist convention for its annual meeting at the First Baptist church of this city, as much as the older members of the churches. Thursday night, May 10, is to be designated as "Young People's Night," and a special program is being prepared with emphasis being placed on the summer assembly to be held at Asilomar in July.

Rev. Sandford Fleming, new pastor of the Twenty-first avenue church in San Francisco, will lead the devotionals; there will be "stunts" by local societies; Rev. Thomas B. Frizelle, pastor of the First Baptist church, Fresno, a favorite among young people, and a member of the faculty at Asilomar two years ago, will give the principal address of the evening. State President M. L. Askin of Tulare will also be present.

Clyde Howden of Fresno, who has been an active worker among the young people of the state for several years, will give a stereopticon lecture showing the growth of the summer assemblies since they were first inaugurated about twelve years ago. Local people will be seen in the pictures which will add greatly to the interest of the lecture.

On Friday afternoon, May 11, all the out-of-town delegates will be given an opportunity to see the beauties of "My City Oakland" in an automobile tour. They will also visit all the Baptist churches in the Eastbay region, go along the Skyline boulevard, be driven through the university grounds at Berkeley, and visit the Berkeley Baptist divinity school.

Advent Christian

L. Charles Beals, missionary, will speak at the morning services tomorrow at the Advent Christian church on "China." In the evening Mrs. Beals will have charge of the meeting. The couple are home on furlough from the mission field in China where Beals has spent thirty years as a missionary.

Swedish Baptist

"Trained for Leadership," will be the theme developed by Rev. John Fribrog pastor, at the evening service tomorrow in the First Swedish Baptist church. Services will be in Swedish. The choir will assist.

The senior B. Y. P. U. will meet at 5:30. At 7:30 the intermediates will meet.

On Thursday evening, April 26, the young ladies of the church will present a missionary pageant on world wide missions. Refreshments will be served at the close of the pageant.

Dives, the Subject of A.M. Sermon

"The Principals of Life" will be the subject of a series of sermons for Sunday evening services at the First English Lutheran church, by Dr. Wendell S. Dysinger, pastor, beginning tomorrow evening.

In speaking of this series, Rev. Dysinger says: "Men have always sought principals for life. A man needs some thought to guide his life, an ideal, a principle. Each man has his choice of several such guides. And either by choosing or by failing to choose, he is making a choice. The main principles have been nobly conceived, and brilliantly presented. They have large followings in the literature of the day. They have great influence in the life of the day. It is important for intelligent Christians to recognize them, and know their relation to the principles which Christ gave. The themes to be presented are: The Principle of Pleasure, of Defiance, of Other Worldliness, of Social Service, of Love. In each of these principles we find great truths—but partial truths. The first one of these will be discussed on Sunday evening."

The morning topic is "A Rich Man." "A famous man of great wealth lived once, whose chief contribution to modern life is that he taught us how not to live. We call this man Dives, for lack of a better name. He was rich, popular, successful. But his life was a failure. The reason for this furnishes the theme for the morning."

KREMER HURLS TWO-HIT GAME AGAINST SACRAMENTO CLUB

FRANK WETZEL LOOKS LIKE MAN WHO HAS BIG PUNCH WHICH OAKS CLUB NEEDS BADLY

LAFAYETTE, WETZEL HELP IN DOWNFALL OF SENATOR "ACE"

Only One Senator Reaches Second Base, While Two Hits Off Ray Kremer Are Scratchy; Local Club Looks Like It Has Shaken Old Man Slump

By EDDIE MURPHY.

One victory after dropping three straight games is nothing to crow over. The Oaks scored one yesterday over the Sacramento Senators by pounding Bill Hughes, their pitching ace, for three runs and eight hits in seven innings, while Ray Kramer twirled an almost no-hit, no-run game. Ray let the Senators down with two scratch hits, and some fans thought that he was entitled to a no-hit, no-run game the same as Scott got last Saturday. But one of the hits off Kremer yesterday was so hard to handle and was not touched by Ray Brubaker, that it was impossible to charge an error against the Oak third sacker. Thursday and yesterday saw the Oaks with plenty of life and looking like they shook Old Man Slump. The boys were all on their toes yesterday, and the fact that they beat the Senators' pitching ace may make a big difference in them now. They played a smart ball game and did not make a boot behind Kremer.

Maybe Frank Wetzel, leftfielder has added the punch that was lacking. The chunky fly chaser has been hitting the ball hard since he got into the lineup as a regular, and yesterday he had another big day, getting a triple, double and singles, and scoring two runs. George LaFayette who had been on a terrible batting slump, took to the offerings of Hughes and garnered a double which scored a run, and he also drove out a line drive that permitted Wetzel to score. The whole team looked to be on its toes yesterday, and here's hoping that Ivan Howard can keep the boys that way.

Only One Senator Gets As Far as Second Bag.

If LaFayette is out of his slump now, and Wetzel can keep mauling the apple, the Oaks ought to make a better showing in the future. Denny Wilie and Claude Cooper are also playing different ball. Al. Maderas has been allowed a chance to break into the infield with Smith on the hospital list and Al. makes more noise out there than was heard from the ntire team in any one day. Ray Brubaker is looking like himself around the third bag, and we hope that the work of the whole team is not only a flash in the pan. The playing of the Oaks yesterday and Thursday brought back the games in which they beat the Cubs three times.

Ray Kremer blanked the Senators without a hit for the first five innings, and the only man to reach first base in that time was Hemmingway who drew a walk in the first inning. He was the only batter to get a free ticket to first in the nine innings. Art Koehler got the first hit off Kremer in the sixth inning when he shot a grass cutter toward third and Brubaker could not get set to field it, the ball hitting him on the foot and going into left field. Schang was put in to run for Koehler and he stole second, to be the only Senator to reach that bag in the nine innings. The other hit was more of a fluke than the one Koehler got. To start the seventh, Hemmingway bounced a fast one off Kremer's glove and Cather fielded it to first just too late to get the runner. Only three men got as far as first on hits or walks and only one to second, which we say is some pitching. In the third inning, Kremer fanned Koehler, Hughes and McGinnis in a row.

Wilie Invites Mollowitz To Take a Canoe Ride.

The Oaks got nine hits in all, eight of them off Hughes in the seven innings. But they hit Hughes hard all the time he was on the mound. Wilie was the first batter for the Oaks and Mollwitz robbed him of a double by leaping high into the air and spearing his line drive with one hand. Wilie cursed in ten different languages and then invited Mollwitz to take a canoe ride on the lake with him. Mollwitz refused the invite and he probably knew his stuff, as Denny intended to give him a ducking.

Frank Wetzel got in his first big blow to open the second inning. He tripled to center field. LaFayette lined a ball to Kopp in left field, and Wetzel scored after the catch. Brubaker got a single in the same frame, but [illegible] and Maderas failed to come through.

Hughes allowed one hit in the next three frames, but the Oaks got to him for five in the sixth and added their other two runs. Cooper started the fun with a single, but was caught stealing. Cather fouled out, and with two out of the way, Wetzel got his second hit. LaFayette's long double [illegible] Fayette moved to third on Brubaker's second hit. Thomas got a hit to right that scored LaFayette, and Thomas was caught at second in trying a double steal with Brubaker.

First Time Oaks Made Five Hits in One Frame.

Carol Canfield pitched the eighth inning for the Senators, and after getting rid of Cooper and Cather, he threw one in Wetzel's alley, and the Oak hit for two bags. LaFayette fanned.

Those five hits in the sixth inning was the first time this season that the Oaks got more than four hits in an inning. Only once did they get four hits in an inning, and that was when they beat Los Angeles for the second time.

A double-header, starting at 1:30 o'clock is scheduled for this afternoon, and games will also be played tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock and in the afternoon at 3 o'clock. The score:

Do You Know?

"The Navy crew is being announced as out of the intercollegiate rowing regatta. Is it for the reason that the navy has lost its famous eight?" ROWING FAN.

Facts do not support any such suspicions of poor sportsmanship on the part of the Navy. It is a known fact that all of the midshipmen [illegible] nual training cruisers at the time that the regatta is held and the commandant of the Academy was influenced only after much persuasion last year to permit the Navy eight to compete, as they had already lost two of the training cruises and it is a very essential part of the training. Because the crew lost seven of its last year's stars it does not follow that the Navy will not have another fine eight this year.

"Is Lee Meadows the only ball player in the major league who wears eye glasses?" C. V. L.

The Philadelphia pitcher is not the only player who wears glasses. George Torporcer, infielder for the St. Louis Cards, wears them, and so does Carmen Hill, a pitcher with the Giants a part of the season last year and now with the Indianapolis club of the American league.

"Should not the practice of 'retiring' resorted to by prominent European athletes when they are beaten be construed as a lack of courage? H. N. M.

Not necessarily. It is merely a matter of the difference in ethics between American athletes and foreigners. No doubt there is some sound logic in the theory of the foreign athlete that it is stupid and foolish to punish himself when he has no chance of winning but some American athletes follow the belief that it "should be done or die in the attempt." In track athletics runners very frequently retire before the finish of a race, but nothing is considered unusual about it.

"What nickname have ball players for southpaw pitchers?" T. T.

Cockeyes.

"Where are the coming Olympic games to be held?" J. W. P.

The 1924 games are scheduled for Paris, and according to present plans the 1928 games will be held in Amsterdam, and they will go to Los Angeles in 1932. Baron de Coubertin, the president of the International Olympic Committee, has announced his intention of suggesting that every third Olympics be given to the United States.

"What is Georges Carpentier doing?" R. T. K.

Carpentier has been idling around the French winter resorts and gracing the ringside with his presence at the big fights in London. He has also been agreeing to meet every opponent offered him. He is matched to fight Joe Beckett in London on June 14, and he is supposed to be matched with Battling Siki for a return battle in Paris in September. In addition he has been offered a match with Mike McTigue in New York by Tex Rickard. It is doubtful if he engages in [illegible] impression of the French and British critics is that he is through for good.

GOLF

By W. D. McNICOLL.

At Sequoyah yesterday the women members competed in the second round of the 54 hole medal play handicap contest in which the winner receives a handsome trophy presented by T. Harry Smith, while the runner up will receive a prize presented by Mrs. Hugo Lorber. In last week's event Mrs. A. E. Lorber established a commanding lead of 13 strokes over her nearest opponent, and although she took second place yesterday to Mrs. R. E. Cotter, who medaled the 18 holes in 97. Mrs. A. E. Lorber and Mrs. M. A. Turner were second with 99 each. Mrs. C. G. Knight and Mrs. Hugo Lorber with 101 and 103 respectively, were fourth and fifth. Only a small attendance of members were present. The final contest for the women's state championship at Ingleside between Miss Kavanagh and Miss Cameron probably attracted quite a few of the players to San Francisco. Here are the detailed scores to date:

Mrs. A. E. Lorber—First round 87; second round 99; 186.

Mrs. C. G. Knight—First round 100; second round 101; 201.

Mrs. M. A. Turner—First round 104; second round 99; 203.

Mrs. R. E. Cotter—First round 107; second round 97; 204.

Mrs. Hugo Lorber—First round 104; second round 103; 207.

The final 18 holes will be played next Friday in conjunction with the medal sweepstake tournament, which promises to be one of the best on record. A return match between Claire Goodwin and Joe Novak versus Dr. C. H. Walter and Dr. J. H. Stineman has been arranged for tomorrow afternoon at Berkeley. In last Sunday's event the Berkeley players came out on top by the narrow margin of one up.

Kardoza of Fremont Holds Vocational to One Little Bingle.

By MARTIN ROTKE.

At the Bay View playgrounds in the first game of the Oakland Athletic League, the Technical High outfit smashed out a total of sixteen hits to trim Oakland High by a tally of 22 to 1. The large score rolled up by the Technites was a surprise to most of the prep fans, who turned out in large force to witness what they thought would be a close game.

Starting with two runs in the first, Tech increased the lead to five in the second, and Oakland put across their lone tally in the third. In the fifth the Purple and Gold scored five more, and in the sixth they circled the bases eight times, the feature of the inning being a long home run by Boyland.

"Frenchy" Larieu started on the mound for the winners and after working for five innings in Class A style, Coach Neece lifted him in favor of "Red" McCarron, who twirled equally as well. Captain Hughes twirled five innings for the Blue and White, while Ed Lewin finished up. Both were bumped all over the lot, but their teammates helped in the Tech rampage by registering ten errors and playing extremely loose ball in the field. Geiser, catcher, and Dallas, shortstop, made seven boots between them, and every miscue assisted the winners in their run scoring.

The summary of the game is as follows:

	R.	H.	E.
Technical High	22	16	1
Oakland High	1	7	10

Batteries: Tech—Larieu, McCarron and Herriman. Oakland—Hughes, Lewin and Geiser.

In the second fray of the day Vocational staged the big surprise, holding the highly touted Fremont team down to a 4 to 1 score, at the Bay View playgrounds. "Lefty" Kardoza, Green and Gold pitcher, featured by holding the Mechanics down with one bingle, which was made by Captain Miller.

Fremont, considered strong with the war-club, looked weak yesterday and were held to five bingles by the masterful pitching of Miller. The Voc squad played dandy ball.

Jerome and Feeley, with two hits apiece, were the hitting stars, one of the former's traveling for the half-way circuit.

The summary of the game is as follows:

	R.	H.	E.
Vocational High	1	1	2
Fremont High	4	5	3

Batteries: Vocational — Miller and Bennett. Fremont—Kardoza and Martin.

Alameda City League Has Two Games Tomorrow

Victorious in their first two games of the season, the Alameda Elks meet the West End Merchants tomorrow afternoon at Washington Park, Alameda. The game will start at 3 o'clock.

The Elks are causing a stir of favorable comment upon baseball observers of the Encinal City. They handily defeated the Durant Motors 5 to 0, Logan allowing four hits. Last Sunday, the Elks trimmed Monterey at Monterey when Logan allowed six hits and was aided by the slugging of Frank Carter. Carter drove out one of the longest home runs seen on the Monterey lot.

The Merchants' skipper, George H. Hagy, has assembled a group of ball tossers that should give the Elks trouble. Armstrong, Wrixson and Bob (Fat) Lamborn, of the U. C. 'Varsity are playing with the Merchants this season as are Ray Singen and Shad Rowe.

BUSHERS OWN CORNER

By AL. ERLE

Crockett will officially open the Three C league when they meet the representatives of Martinez at Community park tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 p. m. A parade will take place at 1 o'clock and the fans will be entertained on the grounds before the game with a band concert by the local band.

Crockett by securing the services of Pitcher Grady McClung, a product of The Oakland TRIBUNE league, have one of the best hurlers around the bay. He was given a trial by Del Howard this spring and was recommended to Crockett by him. McClung should win many ball games for Crockett this year.

[illegible] young pitchers to carry them through. Charles Lampe, a local southpaw, will be given a chance to show his stuff against pretty fast company. Deil Webb of Richmond, a young righthander, will share the pitching honors with Lampe for Martinez.

The Three C league held its final meeting before the opening of the race for the county baseball championship last evening at Hotel Los Medanos, Pittsburg. The meeting was attended by representatives of all the teams comprising the league.

Everything is set for a grand opening tomorrow, when Crockett entertains Martinez at Crockett, Pittsburg will open the season against Antioch at Pittsburg and Concord will travel up to Brentwood and try to get off to a winning start at the expense of Brentwood.

All players' contracts were turned in and passed on and indications point to a close and interesting race as the six teams seem to be very evenly balanced.

San Jose has signed up Larry Hellar to twirl for them the coming season. Larry was with the Del Monte Cafe team in the TRIBUNE Winter League and should make a good man for the Prune Pickers.

Paul Edstrom and "Doc" Silvey have re-organized the Melrose Boosters team and the club will hereafter be known as the Melrose Merchants. All their games will be played on the Melrose diamond and they start their season the coming Sunday, meeting the fast Calatone Water company team.

Edstrom and Silvey have lined up a good team including such men as Kyte, Pryor and Ahlfs of the Del Monte Cafe team and Correia of St. Mary's. "Dutch" Kaiser and Jimmy Rizzo will act as battery.

Jimmy Connick started the [illegible] ing work on the infield last Sunday. Jimmy is sporting a Best Tractor uniform this season.

Hal Nelson met two of "Dutch" Rocks' offering on the nose Sunday at Irvington and hoisted both over the fence for two bases.

"Fodder" Dolan says he is working out every day and the old arm is in good condition. Fodder would make one of the country teams a good chucker.

F. Brandenburg, a new-comer in our midst has been engaged to umpire in the 3-C league. He will break in at Crockett next Sunday From his recommendations he is a first class man.

The Oakland Silents team are negotiating for the services of "Dummey" Taylor, the ex-Giant pitcher, as coach. At present he is coaching a college team in the east. Some class to the Silents, having a coach.

They never will quit. Bill Crosby has fallen into the net and is taking over the reins of the Coast Tires, and Bill expects to put a team in the field that will give them all a run for their money.

Chet Bertolacci is still waiting for better inducements from Eureka. Hope they make the grade for Chet as he is a hard working and conscientuous ball player.

RACEHORSE ROBERTS WILL MEET BILLY SHADE NEXT WEEK

C. B. Barton and his handicapping committee have, after careful investigation, revised the list of handicaps for the fifth annual Athenian Nile golf tournament, the first half of which takes place over the Sequoyah course next Tuesday, April 24, and the concluding 18 holes over the Claremont course on Wednesday, May 23. F. H. Dailey has the place of honor, with a handicap of six.

Dr. C. F. Jarvis is No. 2 on the list with eight strokes. Arthur Finley, with nine, completes the first three. Claire Goodwin, who won the premier trophy last year, has improved his game considerably since then, and will probably start a hot favorite despite his reduced handicap of 11. Leon A. Clark, who won the previous year's event, has now a handicap of 12, which places him on an equal footing with P. J. Walker, the winner of the first and second annual events. The following list of competitors may be still further augmented, as entries do not close until the Calcutta pool auction takes place next Monday evening at the club.

Twenty prizes have been donated by members of the club, and are to be distributed in the following order:

First low net Governors Trophy and name on Three Times Trophy.

Second—Second low net over 36 holes.

Third—Third low net over 36 holes.

Fourth—Low gross score over 36 holes.

Fifth—Fourth low net over 36 holes.

Seventh—Low gross over Sequoyah.

Eighth—Low gross over Claremont.

Ninth—Sixth low net over 36 holes.

Tenth—Seventh low net over 36 holes.

Eleventh—Eighth low net over 36 holes.

Twelfth—Ninth low net over 36 holes, and ditto to twentieth.

After first prize, second and succeeding winner have choice of trophies.

Willard Confident Of Johnson Bout

CHICAGO, April 21.—Jess Willard, former world's heavyweight champion, who is matched to box Floyd Johnson 15 rounds in New York on May 12, passed through Chicago today on his way east to complete his training. Willard expressed confidence that he could stop Johnson in short order and obtain a return match with Jack Dempsey in an attempt to regain his lost crown.

The former champion spent an hour at work in a local gymnasium and boxed several rounds with [illegible] without any apparent signs of strain.

McAuliffe Trims For Firpo Bout

[illegible] 21.—Jack McAuliffe II, Detroit heavyweight, arrived today to enter into the final training grind for his bout American boxer, on May 12. The Detroiter immediately sought out a gymnasium and began an intensive program.

Jess Willard, former heavyweight champion, who is to meet the winner of the Floyd Johnson-Fred Fulton bout Monday night in the main Milk Fund card, will arrive tomorrow to put the finishing touches to his training program.

Malone Taken Ill; Darcy Bout Off

CHICAGO, April 21.—The ten-round match between Jock Malone, St. Paul middleweight, and Jimmy Darcy of Portland, Ore., which was scheduled for Chicago for next Tuesday night, was called off last night when word was received that Malone is ill with influenza at St. Paul and has a temperature of 105. The promoters are making an effort to secure Harry Greb, former light-heavyweight champion, to meet Darcy in Malone's place.

Leonard-Mitchell Fight Scheduled

CHICAGO, April 21.—Billy Gibson, manager for Benny Leonard, lightweight champion, announced last night that he had signed for a [illegible] with Richie Mitchell, Milwaukee welterweight, to be fought here on May 28. The match will go ten rounds and the men have agreed to enter the ring at 138 pounds.

Phil Bettens In Finals of Ojai Tourney

Bettens yesterday defeated Ted Mertz of Stanford, 1-6, 7-5 and 6-2. Mertz forced Bettens to extend himself throughout the play to win out. Wallace Bates defeated Dick Hinkley of Stanford 6-4 and 8-6.

Howard Kinsey, Harold Godshall, Raymond Casey and Clarence Parker are the four remaining players in the men's Ojai singles, Kinsey having eliminated McMullen, 6-2, 6-2, and Weinstrain, 6-3, 6-3. The upset of the day was the defeat of Ralph Sindorf by Raymond Casey in straight sets, 6-4, 6-4.

Judge Landis Advocates Aid For Youngsters

CLEVELAND, O., April 21.—Organized baseball must be supplemented by a system whereby all boys can play the game, Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis, declared yesterday in an address at a dinner given in his honor by the "Stick to the finish club," an organization pledged to support the Cleveland Indians.

"Now if you fellows do what you say you are going to do—stick by the Cleveland Indians until the finish regardless of what happens—I will come back here and tender you a congratulatory dinner myself," Judge Landis said.

When Judge Landis finished speaking, however, Mme. Pavlioska met him half the distance of the speakers' table and after one long drawn out kiss, they stood for several minutes with their arms around each other in earnest conversation while the crowd cheered.

"A year from today I'm coming back here and I want all of you and the darling Madame over there to take lunch with me," the commissioner said.

He left for Chicago last night.

WALTER JAMES SIGNED.

BOSTON, Mass., April 21. — The Giants today signed up Walter James, a right handed pitcher, formerly with the Pacific Coast League.

NEBRASKA WINNER.

Willard Will Appear Before Boxing Board

By HENRY L. FARRELL, United Press Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, April 21. — Jess Willard, the second shipment of flesh that is to be put up as a sacrifice for sweet charity in the milk show here on May 12, was scheduled to arrive in town today.

The former champion heads in from Excelsior Springs on the order of the boxing commission that he must show what kind of training he has done before he can accept the $25,000 that he is to get for fighting for charity.

Jack McAuliffe, the first shipment, arrived on the hoof yesterday from Detroit, but he was so possessed of train legs that he did not work out and the critics didn't get a chance for a tip on how to lay their money.

Firpo, the South American giant, who is scheduled to operate on McAuliffe, has been around New York since he flattened Bill Brennan, and is being kept carefully under cover by Jimmy DeForest, who is getting him ready for the planned bout with Dempsey.

Advance information states that Willard is down to 231 pounds, and that he is in the best condition of his 42 years. Various stories have come out of his training camp about the kind of training he has been doing, and it was for that reason that he was ordered into New York to allow Duke Muldoon to take a look at him.

Floyd Johnson, the Iowa heavyweight, who is to face Willard in the big bout, is training on fights. He is signing contracts also when he has nothing else to do.

Johnson meets Fred Fulton Monday night in Jersey City, and the Johnson backers are howling that it is a very poor match. The Iowan is taking a big chance, but he seems to thrive on taking chances—where Tom Gibbons is not concerned.

Despite the fact that Willard is said to be in good condition, stories persist around town that he will not go on the card and that Luis Firpo will appear against Johnson. Firpo is so signed that he will have to fight anyone that the promoters pick for him if any changes should be necessary on the program.

Advance reservations are now being made for the big show and have been sold.

Salinas Hi Seniors Win Interclass Meet

SALINAS, April 21.—The seniors of the Salinas Union High school won the interclass field and track meet held here yesterday afternoon, scoring 92½ points to 78½ for the juniors. The freshmen finished third with 31 and the sophomores fourth with 18.

The meet was preliminary to the "A" section meet of the Coast Counties Athletic league, which will be held in Hollister on Saturday, May 5. The league's "B" section will contest at Monterey tomorrow.

O'Brien Will Make Leaders Hustle to Win

Entry List for Tribune Medal Bowling Contest Passes Mark of Last Year

"Dynamite Frank" O'Brien, the pride of the pill brigade at Bowling Center headquarters, figures to rank among the prize winners in the annual TRIBUNE diamond medal contest, which starts at the Maryland alleys next Thursday.

O'BRIEN SHARPSHOOTER.

O'Brien, one of the most dangerous of the local bowlers, was not in the annual contest last year, but will make up for lost time. Those of the Bowling Center crew who had previously entered the lists offered a prayer that they draw anyone in the lists except O'Brien for their first round opponent when they heard of his entry. O'Brien, along with Harry Smith of Texas Tommy fame, will be two from the Eleventh street alleys to uphold the honors of the Beam bowling emporium against all comers.

Not to be outclassed, the Auditorium alleys boasted another star entry today when Ernie Reisner, anchor man of the Royal Shoes, filled out the necessary document qualifying him to participate in the festivities of next week.

Reisner, although shooting with a tail-end team in the Auditorium House League, has shown himself to be one of the best tournament bowlers the Thirteenth street house affords. In addition to being death on spares, Reisner has a wonderful hook ball that appears to lift up the pins bodily and walk off with them. He is a welcome addition to the already large list.

[illegible] Watkins, one of the stars of local duckpin league, also was among the entries received this [illegible] big pin smasher as he is a duck demolisher and should go big in the elimination play.

WHITNEY WILL ENTER.

Word was received that R. Whitney, one of the reliables of previous TRIBUNE diamond medal tournaments, would again be on hand to vie with Benkosky, Smith, O'Brien, Hopping, Rossi, etc., for the highest honors.

Many of the local bowlers have been so busy organizing teams to shoot in the Pacific Coast Bowling Congress, which opens at San Jose April 28, that they have not had time to drop in at the Maryland to sign up. Many of these are certain to be among those present during the coming week. J. and G. Whetstone, a pair of class AA bowlers, will be entered, as will Parker, Girard, Sydnor, Romeos, Enos, Strode, Cushma and Johnson.

Landis Asked to Rule on Mulligan

LOS ANGELES, April 21.—Oscar Reichow, business manager of the Los Angeles club of the Pacific Coast league, has asked Judge Kenesaw M. Landis, baseball commissioner, to rule on the status of Eddie Mulligan, third baseman, to play with the San Francisco club.

It is said by Reichow that Mulligan broke a contract with the Racine, Wis., club of the Midwest Association to join the Seals.

Reichow declared Mulligan's status was practically the same as that of Jim Vaughn, who, he asserted, broke a contract with the Chicago Nationals to sign with the Beloit, Wis., club of the Midwest Association, and then broke that contract to return to Chicago and who later was declared ineligible to play with the Angels.

Chicago Police in War on Gamblers

CHICAGO, April 21.—[illegible] gambling by Morgan Collins, Chicago's new chief of police, was extended to even baseball pools today.

Thirty-five printers and alleged distributors of the baseball pool tickets were arrested in raids on headquarters.

Collins declared baseball pool grafters obtained [illegible] 000 last year in Chicago, "mostly from office boys, clerks and stenographers."

A total of nearly 400 persons were arrested in the last 24 hours by the chief in his drive against gambling and other forms of vice.

Dempsey, Manager Leave For East

Dempsey, heavyweight boxing champion, was to leave today for Salt Lake City. He will remain in Utah until time for him to leave for New York City to attend the Milk Fund boxing show, May 12. Jack Kearns, Dempsey's manager left yesterday for Salt Lake City. He will remain there a few days and then go to Chicago and New York City. He said he probably would announce Dempsey's prospective bouts after reaching New York.

Committee Scores Women's Olympiad

CHICAGO, April 21.—Opposition to all participation by women in intercollegiate and international athletic contests was voiced today by a committee of seven women recently named by Mrs. Herbert Hoover, wife of the secretary of commerce, to consider the subject.

In a report made at the convention of the Middlewest Society of Physical Education the commission urged strict supervision for all sports engaged in by women.

CAUSEY DECLINED.

One of the players to be turned over by the New York Nationals in the Bentley deal was Cecil Causey, but Jack Dunn concluded Causey would do him no good, so declined to accept the pitcher. He has, it is reported, asked the New York club to make the whole payment for Bentley in straight cash money.

BOXING CHATTER

Eddie (Hats) Parker returned from Sacramento this morning and lost no time in telling his friends along Broadway about Frankie (Dynamite) Murphy, his boxer, who put the skids under George Lee, the Chinese boy, at Sacramento last night. Murphy looked like a champion, according to Parker, and the judges all handed in a win for his boy. Murphy meets Callahan at the Oakland Auditorium next Wednesday night, and Parker says that Murphy will prove to the fans that he is entitled to a chance with Farr.

Joe Coffey ran into some tough medicine when he tangled with Young Carpentier at Stockton last evening. According to a wire received this morning, Carpentier won three of the four rounds and was awarded the decision. R. Wilson, his manager, says that he is willing to meet Frankie McCann or any other good boy who aspires to be the Junior lightweight champion of the Coast.

Frank Slavin Is Latest to Join 'D-O' Club

(By International News Service.)

VICTORIA, B. C., April 21.—Frank Slavin, one of the few remaining links between the days of bare-knuckle fighting and the padded mitt, is broke—"E pluribus unum!"

A few days ago Jim Jeffries, king of the heavies not many years back, was a pension of unhappiness because of poor investments. Now along comes poor old Frank Slavin with an appeal for support.

Slavin fought in the day when the bare knuckles clicked against the point of the jaw and when the ring was often in a saloon or a barn, and a strict lookout was kept for the police. He will always be remembered for his great battle with Peter Jackson in 1892. Frank was beaten, but it was by one of the best black men that ever stepped inside the ropes.

Since his retirement from the ring Slavin has been trying his hand at mining in British Columbia and the Yukon. He figured in the Klondike rush in '98 and was making both ends meet when the Great War broke out. Slavin signed up with the Canadian Expeditionary Force and, after a long spell in the trenches, was invalided [illegible] ing over the top. Slavin has never been well since his return, and last year he was nearly counted out by the Grim Reaper. He is slowly recuperating, but his [illegible] are gone.

The Canadian Legion has interested itself in his case and will communicate with the American Legion and the British and Australian ex-service bodies with the view to getting funds for the veteran of both the ring and the war.

Labor Order Is Defied in North

SPOKANE, Wash., April 21.—Refusal of the Spokane City Baseball league to permit the Spokane Central Labor council to pass on eligibility of the league's players was transmitted to the labor council today, as an answer to the council's demand that a player on the Moose team be barred because of the team's difficulties with the printing trades council.

"The Spokane City league has no connection with organized labor," a resolution of the league directors declared. "Baseball is an American game for American people."

President George M. Ferris of the league stated that so far as he knew, from his 25 years' baseball experience, the situation was new. He declared intention of permitting any man to play baseball in the league regardless of fraternal, religious or union affiliation.

McTigue After Carpentier's Title

NEW YORK, April 21.—A bout between Mike McTigue, Irish middleweight, and Georges Carpentier of France for the light-heavyweight championship of the world, loomed tonight when Promoter Tex Rickard obtained McTigue's consent, and cabled an offer to the Frenchman. The bout would be staged at [illegible] Rickard announced.

McTigue, who recently won the world's title from Battling Siki, was not present at the conference, but Joe Jacobs, his manager, accepted terms offered by Rickard. Carpentier, it was understood, had demanded $75,000 with the privilege of 25 per cent of the gross receipts for the match.

O. U. First Basemen Fracture Ankles

EUGENE, Ore., April 21.—Two first basemen of the University of Oregon baseball team are out of the game with a broken ankle each. Last Wednesday Hank Schafer broke his ankle sliding into the home plate, and Thursday Ward Johnson, who took his place on the initial sack, broke his ankle sliding at second. The loss of Johnson is severely felt, according to Coach Bohler, as the infield had just began to work smoothly.

The first intercollegiate game scheduled for yesterday afternoon with Willamette university was postponed on account of rain.

Illness Halts Chess Tournament

CLEVELAND, April 21.—The [illegible] Lasker of Chicago and Frank J. Marshall, New York, for the national chess championship, scheduled to be played here tonight, was postponed until tomorrow because of the illness of Lasker.

Homer Fest Features in Major Games

Hartnett Clicks Two for the Circuit: Thirteen Homers in Two Leagues.

CHICAGO, April 21.—(By Associated Press.)—It was home run day in the major leagues yesterday, circuit smashing artists of the Nationals getting nine of the drives, while the Americans tallied four.

The Chicago Cubs defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates in a slugfest after the Cubs had walloped out six four base hits in a total of eight for the game. Hartnett of Chicago sent over the winning run in the ninth with his second over-the-fence drive in the contest. Frieberg of the Cubs also made a brace of homers. The game's total was but one shy of the record of nine, made 28 years ago.

The record was first hung up in the Boston-Cincinnati game of May 30, 1894, when the Braves crashed out five and the Reds poled four. July 4th the following year Chicago battled Cincinnati in the afternoon game of a holiday bill and tied the mark, the Cubs clouting five and the Reds again making four.

HARTNETT HITS TWO.

Hartnett, a recruit catcher, was the hero of the day. After escaping a putout, when Schmidt dropped a foul ball off his bat, Hartnett came through with a wallop which sent the ball into the leftfield stands and put two runners across the plate ahead of him. He then came back strong in the ninth, when the veteran Babe Adams was hurling, and landed on the ball so hard that it sailed over the leftfield wall for his second four bagger.

It was the longest hit on record in the [illegible] Grimes, first baseman of the Pirates, drove the ball into the stands, [illegible] his second circuit clout of the series. Harold Traynor was the other Pirate home run hitter of the day.

Babe Ruth again aided the New York Yankees in maintaining a spotless standing when, with the bases full in the ninth, and one run behind, he shot out a two-bagger that sent the winning run over. The Boston Americans had maintained the lead from the first inning, when three Red Sox scored. Ruth got a single, a double and a triple and maintained his batting average of .600.

BENTLEY GETS BUMPED.

The Giants lost their first game of the season but maintained their lead in the Nationals when the Boston Braves went on the war path. Jack Bentley, McGraw's $65,000 southpaw, made his debut and was batted hard.

The St. Louis Cardinals were defeated by the Cincinnati Reds.

Philadelphia and Brooklyn staged another fast finish, but the Phillies won out in the ninth.

Cleveland made it three straight over the White Sox.

The Philadelphia Athletics took Washington into camp for the third successive win.

The Browns won their first game substituting at first for George, Sisler, made a four base drive.

Three teams in the Americans are still undefeated, New York, Philadelphia and Cleveland, while the National leaders, all of whom have lost one or more games, are New York, Chicago and Philadelphia.

LAST NIGHT'S FIGHT RESULTS

SACRAMENTO, April 21—Dynamite Joe Murphy took a decision over Georgie Lee in the main event last night. In the semi-windup Sam Compagno knocked out Billy Lakeman in the third round.

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa, April 21.—Archie Amons, Marshalltown welterweight, earned a popular decision over Glenn Milligan of Sioux City in their ten round bout here last night.

VANCOUVER, B. C., April 21.—Vic Foley of Vancouver, claimant of the Canadian bantamweight title, after a bout that was even for part of the way but in which he was clearly ahead in the tenth and final round, was given a decision here last night over Bud Manning of Seattle.

Georgie Burns, Portland, Ore., lightweight, knocked out Pat Williams, Seattle, and Frankie Green, Seattle bantamweight, did the same thing to Pyme Duncan, Vancouver. Bert Dunbar, Vancouver, lightweight, and Swede Olson, Bellingham, boxed four rounds to a draw.

LOS ANGELES, April 21.—Frankie McCann of Oakland, Cal., and Young Brown of Hemet, Cal., 150 pounders, boxed a draw in the main event at the Hollywood American Legion stadium last night. It was largely a toe-to-toe slugging contest. "Dandy Dick" Griffin of Fort Worth, Texas, won a decision over Pete Herman, bantamweight of Sacramento, Cal., in the semi-windup. Fred Cullen, of Los Angeles, easily defeated Jack Reddick, claimant to the middleweight championship of Canada, in a special preliminary.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., April 21.—Ernie Goozeman, California, scored a technical knockout over Joey Sanger, Milwaukee featherweight boxer, in the first round of a scheduled ten rounds, no decision bout here last night.

All-Star List Of Bouts for Boxing Show

Racehorse Roberts to Meet Billy Shade in the Closing Event.

Tommy Simpson, local boxing promoter, is to the front with another all-star boxing card to be staged at the Oakland Auditorium next Wednesday night. Last week Tommy packed the fans into the auditorium and had to turn many away when he staged his first all-star card of the season. Tommy has a number of different faces on the card this week and he hopes to show the fans as nifty a set of battles as he did last week. Racehorse Roberts and Billy Shade will meet in the closing event. Roberts recently beat Ray Pelky and he is a boy who always tries and should give Shade plenty to worry about.

Chick Roach, who boxed a tough draw with Dudley at the auditorium about six weeks ago, has a date with Tilly (Kid) Herman.

Frankie Murphy, who won an easy verdict over George Lee at Sacramento last night, will make his appearance on the card with Jimmy Callahan. The card follows:

Racehorse Roberts vs. Billy Shade.

Tilly (Kid) Herman vs. Chick Roach.

Tod Morgan vs. Joe Coffey.

Dynamite Murphy vs. Jimmy Callahan.

Stanley Willis vs. Joe Dunn.

Louie Garcia vs. Roy Sutherland.

Billy Wallace vs. Cap Nelson.

Washington Wins From Idaho Nine

SEATTLE, April 21.—The University of Washington defeated the University of Idaho 9 to 5 here tonight in the opening game of the Pacific Northwest Intercollegiate conference. Snow, the Vandal star pitcher, who was working behind the place because of an injury to another man, knocked a home run, and Eugene Walby, Washington catcher, got a homer and a three-bagger.

ARE STILL "SNAPPERS."

Ardmore, shifting from the defunct Texas-Oklahoma League to the more substantial Western Association, will still retain the nickname of "Snappers" for its team, as a mark of honor to Earl Snapp, who is and has been the spark plug of the Ardmore team since its organization.

Doheny Oil Earnings Grow; 150 Million Program Ahead

BUSINESS and FINANCE

By H. S. SCOTT.

Operations for the decline were successfully conducted in today's brief but active session of the New York stock market. High grade railroad shares which previously had offered strong resistance to selling pressure, dropped 1 to 3 points. Sharp recessions also were noted in the industrial group, particularly in the equipments, steels, oils and motors. There were a few isolated points of strength, Pan-American being run up 3 points and some of the sugar shares moving to higher ground on additional reports tending to confirm a shortage in the Cuban crop. The closing was heavy. Sales approximated 515,000 shares.

Pan-American "B" advanced ⅝ to 67½ in response to the statement of Chairman Doheny that earnings this year will be better than last and that permanence of the present dividend rate was assured.

Losses of a point each were recorded by United States Realty, Phillips Petroleum and Crucible Steel. Other recent industrial favorites to lose ground were Lima Locomotive, Cosden Oil, U. S. Steel, California Petroleum, Reynolds Spring, Studebaker and Producers and Refiners. Rails again offered better resistance to selling pressure but New York Central and Canadian Pacific continued to yield. There were a few outstanding strong spots, most conspicuous of which was Dupont up 2½ and Stewart Warner 1.

Moderate recovery was made by Standard Oil of California. Republic Steel preferred, Bethlehem B., Gulf States and Vanadium yielded fractionally while U. S. Steel dropped 1½ points.

Losses of a point or more were established by Magma Copper, American Can, International Paper, Maxwell A, Studebaker, American Express, International Harvester, Baltimore & Ohio, Atlantic Coast Line and American Woolen. Louisville & Nashville broke 3¼ and General Asphalt preferred 3. Foreign Exchanges opened irregular. Demand Sterling eased slightly [illegible] and French Francs held steady around 6.66 cents.

PAN-AMERICAN EARNINGS FOR 1922 WERE 31 MILLION.

NEW YORK, April 21.—Edward L. Doheny, chairman of the Pan-American Petroleum & Transport Co., said today that full development of the California naval oil reserve lands granted to the company by the government last December would require an outlay of more than $150,000,000, of which about $14,000,000 already has been spent, but the contract calls for 3000 well, but development is progressing slowly, he said, owing to the present excessive oil output in California. The company has six wells almost completed now.

Doheny also stated that the company's annual report to be issued in a few days would disclose net earnings of about $31,500,000 after taxes had been paid. Current earnings are understood to be at the rate of about $33,000,000 for this year.

MORELAND MOTOR TRUCK HITTING NEW LEVELS.

The Moreland Motor Truck company factory at Burbank hung up last week the highest mark made in the plant. Twenty-nine completed trucks were rolled out of the doors during forty-eight regular working hours, an average of a completed truck every hour and thirty-nine and a fraction minutes, as against the best record made during the previous year of a truck every two hours and forty minutes. Production thus far this year has approximated a 50 per cent increase over the same period last year. This in turn is reflected by a similar consistent increase in the pay-roll of the factory and general expenditures.

It has always been the policy of the company to buy all supplies that it is possible to secure on the Coast in this territory and for several years this has meant the expenditure locally of about 60 per cent of the total supply expense. At the rate of present production and the demands made for supplies to maintain this schedule, it is estimated that the company will expend this year something better than $1,500,000 around home.

NASH MOTORS QUARTERLY EARNINGS OVER $1,500,000.

Nash Motors Company has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent ($1.75 per share) upon the preferred "A" stock. The question of the common stock dividend was not taken up as it has been always the policy of the Nash company to bring up the question of common dividend semi-annually.

As the last common dividend of $2.50 was paid February 1 of this common year, consideration of a second common dividend will come before the directors at their July meeting.

The fiscal year of the Nash company begins December 1. Vice-President and Comptroller Alford reported net income for the three months—December, January and February—after selling, administrative and local and federal taxes, of $1,573,241.

The factories of the company are running at capacity and in fact are unable at the present time to fill orders by a wide margin. Profits for March were not reported but it is probable they will exceed the average for the preceding three months and the outlook for the next few months, at least, is excellent.

RAILROAD EARNINGS EXPECTED TO BE GOOD.

Moody's Weekly Review of Financial Conditions in its current issue says in part:

"Our railroads have adopted a commendable plan for avoiding freight congestion next fall, through repairing existing equipment and buying new. But this does not mean any wild boom in the equipment business. Gross 1923 outlays for rails and equipment appear unlikely to exceed $625,000,000 as compared with about $440,000,000 in 1922.

"In determining when to buy bonds for profit on the principal rather than merely for income, one needs to have in mind the four phases or stages through which the bond market usually passes after it has reached a high peak and before it again starts upon a main upward swing. Let us enumerate:

"First, when trade becomes active business men withdraw working capital which has been temporarily invested in bonds and this means more or less selling. Second, the trade activity causes money rates to rise, and this causes high calling of bonds and diverts funds from the bond market into the money market. Third, if trade becomes extremely active it takes so much money to finance it that a capital famine develops, and business men have to sell bonds to raise capital. Fourth, the general liquidation incidental to a bear movement in stocks serves to depress bonds. These phases, [illegible] the third, are nearly always shown in actual experience.

"Railroad earnings, according to our analysis should be very satisfactory as to both gross and net during the balance of this calendar year, and in spite of the general rise in prices and costs."

Lehigh Reports to Show Poor Year

NEW YORK, April 21.—The annual report of the Lehigh Valley, which is expected out in several days, will be a disappointment to many who are not following the affairs of the company closely, it is expected. The road had worked particularly hard to continue heavy anthracite shipment, despite all obstacles in the period of shortage and the result has been a falling off in operating income. The coal properties also were idle during the whole strike period with an effect upon the earnings. On the other hand, there are many strong points in the company's position, especially [illegible] and railroad operations are expected to be restored to their former [illegible] severe winter weather is out of the way. April, it is said, should witness the recovery in earning power of the property.

Light Asked on New Rail Project

WASHINGTON, April 21.—The interstate commerce commission today issued a questionnaire to backers of [illegible] company, asking it to submit at a hearing to be held on the North Pacific coast, in July, a statement of the financing plan which it proposed to put through to raise funds for a projected new line in Washington state and complete analysis of the possibilities in the territory [illegible].

The line is designed to facilitate movement of apples out of the western growing regions, by connecting up transcontinental railroads. The commission questionnaire asked for information on present traffic volume and facilities of the transcontinental lines available for the movement.

Cotton Spinning Sets New Mark

(By Associated Press)

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Cotton spinning set a new record in March reaching more than nine and one-half billion active spindle hours, the census bureau's monthly report today showed. In cotton growing States, spinning activity exceeded five billion active spindle hours for the first time.

Active spindle hours for March for the entire country totaled 9,531,002,951 or an average of 255 hours for each spindle in place.

COTTON BROKERS WATCH MOVES IN U. S. SUGAR SUIT

Mercantile World, Not Optimist Action, Will Result in Commodity Drop.

BY CONSOLIDATED PRESS
Special to The Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 21.—Extension of the government's move for injunctions preventing the trading in sugar futures to cover trading in cotton futures is considered by men interested in cotton in New England, New York and the South as more than a remote possibility. Cotton, like sugar, is a basic commodity which has had a sensational advance this year and each is extensively traded in for future delivery.

Sugar men, both refiners and producers, declared today that they did not expect the government move for an injunction against the New York Coffee and Sugar Company and the New York Coffee and Sugar Clearing Association to have a decided effect on the price of sugar to the ultimate consumer. Some admitted that the move was likely to restrict speculation, but declared that when all was said and done the most reliable figures did not indicate a big world surplus and prices depended on the actions of the consumers to a far greater extent than on speculative trading in futures.

COTTON PRICES.

A very good sized part of the cane crop of the Southern states was sold by growers on sugar deliveries and they were able by this means to average out the prices obtained for their crops, although the Southern planters were too late for the full benefit of the sugar advance to reach them.

Cotton men also feel that the markets in the commodity are pretty well stabilized at present levels through supply and demand and a still further advantage of position is given planters by unfavorable weather conditions in the Southeast, where frosts, cold nights and rains have delayed cultivation.

The Southern Wholesale Drygoods Association, taking forehanded action, has pledged its members not to offer staple cotton goods such [illegible] ings, cheviots and plaids, for delivery more than sixty days beyond the date of order.

BEET PRICES RISE.

The attitude of the beet sugar producers is well exemplified by the president of the Holly Sugar Company at Delta, Colo., who announced plans for enlarging and improving its plant in anticipation of the biggest year the company has ever known. The president declared there was a strong probability that beet growers would receive another bonus payment of $2 in addition to the $7 a ton already paid them. He added that the present market outlook gave promise of even better payments for the 1923 crop. Prices of sugar advanced 20 cents a hundred pounds in Denver on news of the government's action.

Competition for beet field workers is spirited. Two hundred have just left for the Michigan fields as a result of offerings of higher wages than the intermountain growers would pay.

LUMBER IMPROVES.

Lumber demand at the Southern mills has jumped upward again after a brief slump. Export business is intensively heavy, inquiries are coming in from the north in increasing quantities and a large volume of actual business has been booked. Prices are steady for high grade stuff but a trifle easier for the less expensive grades. High water has affected operations of some mills and deliveries have also been hampered by this cause.

Buying both at retail and wholesale, throughout the Middle West continues approximately even with production and while the volume of business is larger than a month ago, there are steadier influences in evidence which have resulted from the general policy of the bankers of that section to watch credits closely.

Michaels, Stern & Co. and the Keller-Heuman-Thompson Company, large clothing manufacturers of Rochester, N. Y., will restore their wage scales to the 1922 level the first full week in May. Employees of Chanve Brothers' silk mills at South Manchester, Conn., will return to work, having won a 12½ per cent increase Monday.

Mexican Deputies Debate Oil Rights

MEXICO CITY, April 21.—The Chamber of Deputies which is considering the enacting of a new petroleum law, has approved article 5, which confirms petroleum rights legally acquired before May 1, 1917, when the present constitution became effective stipulating, however, that the concessionaries must revalidate their claims within three [illegible] of the new law.

Article 5 is intended to satisfy the objections voiced by foreign oil men against the alleged confiscatory nature of article 37, in the present constitution which vests the oil rights in the nation.

The deputies are continuing their debate in regard to regulation of petroleum rights acquired since the new constitution went into effect. [illegible] law has not yet been [illegible]

Curtailed Consumption of Commodities Certain Unless Advances Halt

By STUART P. WEST

By Consolidated Press, Leased Wire to Tribune.
Copyright, 1923, by OAKLAND TRIBUNE.

NEW YORK, April 21.—The foremost topic of discussion at the close of the present week is whether or not the general business improvement can continue at the pace set during the past two months without involving the danger of inflation and another unpleasant experience like that of three years ago. This is by no means a new subject even though misgivings openly expressed have become more of a factor in the markets.

In my article a week ago, the opinion was given that trade expansion had gone as far as it was likely to go. With the steel mills operating above ninety per cent of capacity, the manufacturers of woolen and cotton goods working overtime, with a record output of pig iron and with the railroads handling the largest traffic ever known at this season of the year, there was little more to be expected in the way of increase.

PRICES A BIG FACTOR.

But it is quite a different thing to say that the business volume has reached its peak and to say that a serious downward turn is imminent. Everything depends upon the future price movement. If a halt is not called upon the advance in commodity prices, it is conceded on all sides that consumption will be curtailed and then a serious reaction will set in. If, on the contrary, the tendency toward rising prices is checked, there is no reason to look for any important change from present conditions.

PRODUCTION UP.

The Department of Commerce, summarizing results for March, has shown that production in many lines was well up to the top of three years ago, but it also has pointed out that wholesale prices on the average still are thirty-five per cent away from the high at that time.

This is one of the two important elements of difference between the situation now and that of 1920. The second is that, so far, neither the great enlargement of trade nor the advance in security prices has brought any strain upon the credit structure. The banks have depended upon their own resources to meet the increased demands and have been very sparing in their use of the rediscount facilities of the Federal Reserve.

There is, in round numbers, a billion dollars of gold more in the country today than there was in 1919, and while this constitutes a temptation to inflation it is nevertheless an immense extra credit reserve.

CALL MONEY EASIER.

The comparison between the 40½ per cent federal reserve ratio of May, 1920, and the present 75½ per cent must always be insisted upon in reply to any charge that the financial situation is approaching the danger stage. Instead of marking up of official discounts which Wall street was apprehending a month ago, the past week has seen easier rates for call money and for bankers' acceptances, and decidedly larger offerings of time funds at the concession demanded by borrowers.

OUTPUT OF SECURITIES.

The two features which must be regarded as unfavorable have often been set forth and discussed. The first is increase in wages, which now has become nationwide; the other is the excessive outpouring of new securities. A condition where wage costs are on the increase and where business men are afraid to meet these with a further price advance, spells smaller profit margins.

There is a consideration which unquestionably has been in the Wall street market for the last month. It has shown quite as plainly as has the higher interest rate in the investment market of the last six months. Its influence on the stock market is not so apparent because of the abundance of credit and the consequent ability of underwriting syndicates to carry indefinitely what they cannot readily sell. But it does imply a competition with the older listed stocks which is an obstacle to operations for the rise.

TRADE PAUSE DESIRABLE.

Nothing has cropped out in the trade news of the week to warrant any feeling of pessimism. Such pause as has occurred from the feverish activity of last month, is altogether desirable. It is a good thing that buyers of steel no longer have to pay premiums for prompt delivery and that prices have been shaded. The break in the speculative cotton market is favorable for the outlook in cotton goods. These are two important instances which point toward a check upon advancing prices and which accordingly are an assurance that the situation has been taken in time to prevent a recurrence of the troubles of 1920.

SUGAR POSITION STRONG.

The sugar trade is in a quite different position for here all the recent data tends to support the lowered estimates of the Cuban crop and hence to endorse the view that if there is no actual shortage in 1923 the relation between world production and consumption is going to be abnormally small. Sugar refiners have fought against this conclusion, as is not surprising. So have representatives of the American beet sugar industry but growers of sugar beets are supposed to have pretty well sold out at prices well under present levels and therefore are in no position to get their share of the advantage of any further rise.

Now the government has taken steps in an attempt to restrain what it is pleased to call an "unwarranted speculation" in sugar futures. The outcome of the court proceedings will be awaited with the utmost interest. If the sugar trade is right and the government is wrong on the question of demand and supply and the justice of the recent price advance, it will be one of the worst fiascos in years.

On the assets side, total capital assets are $[illegible], as compared with $347,637,972 in the preceding year while total current assets were $58,075,238, as compared with $42,348,113 in the preceding year. FATE OF RAISIN GROWERS' DRIVE HANGS IN BALANCE

Slightly Over Half of Needed Acreage Signed: Financial End More Successful.

FRESNO, April 21.—Official reports issued by the Sun Maid Raisin Growers today show that 50.6 per cent of the raisin acreage has been signed to crop contracts to date with only four remaining days to secure the 35 per cent still needed.

"Unless this campaign is a success the present stock of 85,000 tons must be sold at a price so far below the present market price that every present contract holder will be subject to a bill back against advances already made for the 1922 crop." Ralph P. Merritt, managing director said.

Estimating the tonnage of the 1923 crop to be the same as the 1922 crop and selling the coming crop at prices now being offered by independent packers would mean a loss of approximately $10,000,000, Merritt said.

Prospects for the securing of the acreage seem very slim and officials admitted that only a miracle could save this, the most powerful co-operative association in the nation, with the 15,000 grower members and which handles ninety per cent of the nation's raisin crop. The stock subscription campaign being staged jointly is apparently a success and the needed $2,500,000 will have been raised by Monday night, Managing Director Ralph P. Merritt predicts.

LOS ANGELES, April 21.—Los Angeles business men have pledged $100,000 to the Sun Maid Raisin Growers' Association and practically promised to raise that much more in a few days, to aid in financing this year's crop in the San Joaquin valley.

Action was taken after 200 had gathered in the chamber of commerce and listened to appeals for help from Al C. Joy and Ralph Merritt, of Fresno, and after William T. Bisher, president of the chamber of commerce, and Shannon Crandall had told of the interest of Los Angeles in the San Joaquin valley.

Prices for Hay Shade Off Under Inactive Demand

Indications Are That Supply Will Be More Ample, Says Market Review.

Arrivals of hay for the past week, 1303 tons, as compared with 1477 tons of the previous week, says the A. W. Scott Company.

The demand for hay by the local trade during the past week has been rather slow. Enough business has been transacted to take care of all the arrivals, so there has been no tendency toward accumulation but demand is weak and prices have shaded off on all grades.

Export and coastwise shipping have continued steady but the demand has eased up and volume has not been equal to the last couple of weeks. Conditions in the eastern cities have reduced demand greatly and increased coast business has not been sufficient to replace it.

Interior trading has only been fair. Advantage has been in buyer's favor, as general business has been dull as farmers and holders of hay all seem anxious to move what balance they have on hand. Indications are that the supply will be more than ample for the season's requirements, as general crop conditions now look so good that all those who have been holding on to their hay because they believed they must need it next season, have now been shipping and will put it on the market.

Alfalfa continues dull and weaker with the demand slackening up, as holders are anxious to move what they have on hand. Nevada hay [illegible] ume.

Mill feeds are stronger and in [illegible] middlings are particularly scarce and command better figures. Cocoa nut meal is higher and moving fairly well. Alfalfa meal is very well cleaned up and sells at better figures.

HOUGHTON, Mich., April 21.—Sawmill operators in Upper Michigan are already feeling the effects of the "man grabbing season." [illegible] exodus of men from the lumber camps to the cities has already begun.

WORLD RANGE OF GOOD TIMES SEEN BY WOOL MEN

With Prices From 40 to 50c Per Pound, Growers Are "Coming Into Own."

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS LEASED WIRE TO TRIBUNE.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, April 21.—Prosperity of a world wide and permanent nature was predicted in a statement here by F. J. Hagenbarth, president of the National Wool Growers' Association.

Asserting that in the west sheepmen "were coming into their own" with prices for wool prevailing from 40 to 50 cents a pound, Hagenbarth said that prosperity of the wool growers could be taken as a criterion for general prosperity.

In the inter-mountain country there are about 4,000,000 sheep which will bring in at the prevailing prices nearly $15,000,000 for wool and about $20,000,000 for lambs, according to Hagenbarth.

"There is one thing to be done in behalf of the sheep men, however," he continued, "and that is to adjust wool freight rates. They are now notoriously unbalanced, and unscientific. They are not equitable in different sections of the country.

"At hearings to be held durring the month at Billings, Salt Lake, Boise, Portland and Phoenix, by the interstate commerce commission we propose to make a scientific expose, bearing in mind however that the railroads must live."

YAKIMA, Wash., April 21.—Eight cars of Yakima wool valued at more than $100,000 has been shipped to Boston from this valley during the last two days. The wool shipped weighed 260,000 pounds and represented the clip of four companies operating here. The average price paid was 39 cents a pound.

Shearing in the valley is practically finished, and operations are expected to be transferred to Kittitas county during the coming week.

SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1923

ONE DRIVE FOR FORTY-THREE.

Oakland has reached the quarter post in the Community Chest drive.

Upon the results of the next few days will depend the success of a campaign which has for its objective a single assurance of support to all of the charitable and welfare organizations. The city cannot afford to fail.

With the advent of the hundreds of workers in the field and the spreading of the word as to the purpose of the campaign and the objects to be gained there is being shown an increasing support. There is opportunity under this plan for the citizen to set down as one entry in his budget the figure which represents his subscription to those institutions and agencies which are performing necessary work in the community. Instead of answering appeals from forty-three institutions he answers one appeal and knows when he makes that answer, that each of the forty-three will get what it needs and has asked for. Where one man, under the Community Chest, gives a part of his subscription to an institution in which he has no close personal interest, other men are giving a part of theirs to those agencies which the first man regards with particular favor. The welfare and charitable program is evened up, the same sum of money which the community gives each year through countless drives, is given in one campaign and, in addition, that amount which is saved by the elimination of overhead and waste.

Today's work and tomorrow's are important. The half way mark must be reached and the three-quarters approached so that the quota will be met at the close of the campaign. Then the reputation of Oakland will have stood the test and this city will have joined those others who have adopted the sensible and efficient way of meeting their obligations.

CHEERFUL REPORTS.

From all of those sources to which men must turn for the information comes word that there is to be plenty of work this summer for everyone and that wages will be somewhat higher, In several districts it is probable there will be a labor shortage.

An analysis of the industrial employment situation made by the Federal Department of Labor says that a "healthy and robust" condition is indicated, that there is a steady decrease in unemployment in every section of the country. Industries continue to expand, the building program is stimulated to new heights by the opening of spring and the steel manufacturers report a labor shortage. Employment in the vehicle industry shows marked improvement.

The planting season has brought new demands for farm labor with indications that in certain sections a union shortage will [illegible]

Of sixty-five industrial centers of the country, fifty-four cities were found to have decreased unemployment during March.

In discussing the situation in the steel plants where common laborers have been given an increase in wages Secretary Mellon forecasted similar advances in certain other industries, but it is his opinion that wage advances will not be enough to lead to a general increase in commodity costs or a repetition of the inflation of 1919 and 1920 and this view is borne out by the weekly financial report of the Federal Reserve System.

A RIVER SURVEY.

In 1912 the freighter Agnes Dollar, drawing 22 feet of water, three times successfully navigated the Sacramento river to Sacramento. Not long after the same vessel, in an attempt to reach Stockton, was grounded. It had been demonstrated, however, that with some attention to the shoals the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers could be traversed by ships of fairly deep draft.

There is considerable interest in the river cities and towns now in the Federal plan to cut into Seal Island and Middle Lands below Pittsburg and thus remove two hazards from the channel. As far as the amount of Government money to be expended is concerned the [illegible] a direction of opportunity, a step in a general program.

Preliminary to the work the War Department is asking for information on the number of vessels, their tonnage, operators' names, values of cargoes, etc. This information must be presented before the appropriation is forthcoming and it is important that the data be correct and complete. The Chamber of Commerce at Antioch has undertaken the task which, in all probability will bring its rewards in increased shipping.

GETTING ACQUAINTED.

To the Trade Extension Committee of the Oakland Chamber of Commerce the Eastbay is indebted, in a large measure, for the cordial esteem in which this city is held by the cities of central and northern California.

Acting on the theory that Oakland should be more concerned in what it can do toward cooperating with the other communities in their problems and advancing the reputation and prosperity of the particular crop or industry of each, than it is with what those cities may do for Oakland, the committee has carried forward an intelligent and effective program. An evidence of this week is in the manner with which the committee has moved to back the San Joaquin Valley in its campaign to refinance the Sun Maid Raisin Association, its determination to participate in the Raisin Day Festival at Fresno, and its assurance to Livermore that Oakland will not relax its efforts to secure for that city the Government hospital for which a site has been purchased.

Another service is to be performed next month when the Committee will conduct an excursion into the Napa Valley. The route has been mapped and all arrangements have been made. Those who went out in advance to prepare the itinerary are enthusiastic in their reports of the receptions given them at Vallejo, Napa, St. Helena, Calistoga and elsewhere. At least seventy-five men, representative of Oakland and Eastbay business and manufacturing interests, will make the trip.

Oakland was a pioneer in trade extension excursions and has proved to the other large cities of the Coast the value of these acquaintanceship visits to neighboring places. In performing constructive work for the benefit of those communities the committee has shown that it realizes the obligations in following up the excursions with a continued program of cooperation and that it is no idle boast that these trips have as a main object the desire to learn wherein Oakland may serve the surrounding cities and towns.

OIL IN COAL.

As a result of experiments conducted in West Virginia it has been discovered that coal, freshly taken from the mines, may be baked at a low temperature and made to yield high test gasoline to the amount of ten gallons to the ton. This is a new way of getting gasoline which offers opportunities for exploitation. Depending upon the cost will be the extent of operations at least until such time may come when the oil wells fail to supply the demand.

The so-called Belgian process is attracting a particular attention in all of those sections of the country in which there are coal deposits. It is not surprising, then, that Contra Costa county is anxious to ascertain if the coal which once represented a large industry there does not contain oil. An analysis of shale taken from one ranch has shown oil of a high grade.

Those in charge of the West Virginia experiments predict that, unless vast new oil fields are discovered, the time will come when the extraction of oil from the coal deposits of the country will become an industry established on a large scale. It is proposed to continue the experiments, ascertain what grades of coal are best suited to the tests, and to make the information known. When all of this is done Contra Costa county will be in a position to determine whether or not its coal resources have an oil value.

The government intimates it is out to stop the practice of the sugar speculators who have been sitting in to sweeten the pot.

Seeds from King Tut's tomb have been planted in America. Look for a harvest of hieroglyphics.

VOCATIONS AND CRIME.

Statistics given out by Dr. Amos O. Squire, Sing Sing's head physician, on the vocations of offenders committed to that prison during the last year show some interesting contracts. One man out of every seven committed was a laborer. The relatively high proportion among the unskilled of foreigners not yet accustomed to American laws appears in this high contribution to the prison population.

Second in number the chauffeurs, who form about one-fortieth of the male working body of New York city, contributed one-fourteenth of the Sing Sing intake. The fault is not that chauffeurs turn often into criminals but rather that some criminals have a taste for trying their luck or masquerading as taxicab drivers.

Other figures in Dr. Squire's table are not so easily explained. Why should cooks have a slight lead over waiters in this list, or why should electricians be less law-abiding than carpenters? Why should twenty-one barbers go to Sing Sing when only one hat cleaner gets sent up? Are actors, acrobats, Pullman porters and night watchmen of one mind about respect for the law?

As far as concerns the stage, this result will please it. Actors suffer, like honest chauffeurs, from the criminal's weakness for adopting their profession when in need of an ostensible means of support.

There seem to be no callings that lead particularly to crime. There are some where criminals like to insinuate themselves, and some where the illiterate and unwise are found.—New York Sun.

The Road Forgotten.

"The vanishing of hoof and goad Brought me my sorrow," said the road.
"And now the alders lean the wall
To intercept the last footfall.

"Oh, once my bosom was a bell
Whereon the sleek hoof-hammers fell,
Apprising all the countryside
That gentlemen were riding wide.

"My bridge became a rattling drum
When oxen, plodding listless, dumb,
Let laden wagons down a hill
And crossed the river to the mill.

"My silver thread lies broken where
The hazel thicket hides the hare;
Fern, moss and grass vie to efface
The memory of my disgrace.

"And, oh, as though I had not learned—
Who hoof and wheel and foot have spurned—
Each grassy life and alder fife,
Sings: 'Service is the law of life.'"

Broken Bowl.

"Oh, loose me, Love, your hair," I cried,
"Its April dusk where fairies hide,
Awaiting the new moon's lantern light!"

She set it free, but bound me tight;
"It's done," she sighed.

"Look! Look into my heart," I prayed—
"The eyes of you make me afraid,
They're blue as jade, with opal's fire."

"I look," she said, "it is a mire
Where I'm dismayed."

"Ah, give me your heart, then," I pled.

"Take it! It's blood with love is red;
With love it's stained my white, white soul
That was as the pearls of Peshwarol!
Take it!" she said.

"At last, now are you mine?" I queried.
"Alack!" she breathed, and drooped awearied,
"Puzzle am I—a broken bowl,
Which love of a man will alone make whole."

Inspirational, Perhaps?

Sir: The announcements of the Travel Show are giving some of us hours of anxiety. They promise us "International dancing every afternoon and evening." Now, I ask you, what is international dancing? Or, to put it in another way, how does one dance internationally? I submitted the question to a group of our young intellectuals, and even they were at a loss. One, who is a very earnest person, suggested that as nationalism has quite gone out in the best circles there are no more national dances—nothing but international dances. Another, more soulful, thought that it might mean the choragic mood of the international mind. Perhaps he meant the choreal mood, but I won't quibble. Still another hinted at the possibility of a typographical error. It should read, he thought, "international" — for example, an Irish Republican, a Free Stater and a Belfast boy in a three-handed reel. What about it? Can the Lantern shed any light?

A SWEET SHOT

EXCERPTS from the NATIONAL PRESS

Boston Transcript: While congress is dilly-dallying with the long projected program for a national forest policy, and sending a committee of inquiry on a summer holiday around the country, New England is going steadily ahead with constructive plans of its own. State forests are being developed in several of the states of this region; cities and towns are following suit, notably in Massachusetts, where twenty-two municipalities have already devoted public land to timber culture; and a good many private owners of woodland have likewise begun not only to plant their cut-over tracts to trees, but to attempt in other ways the practice of forestry in a more or less rudimentary fashion.

Portland Oregonian: Stevenson would have joyed in such a theme. Her decks were strewn with blackened cartridges, her riding lights were out, and she rose and fell to the swells pathetically—the loneliest thing on all the seven seas, an abandoned ship. They found her, not off some tiny tropical key a century or so ago, but only yesterday and near the Long Island shore—a two-masted schooner of the rum fleet.

Salt Lake Tribune: Governor Mabey has concurred in the recommendation of United States Marshal Ward and officials of San Juan county that the unattached, nomad Indians in southeastern Utah be placed on a suitable reservation in charge of a regular Indian agent, thus effecting a prompt and permanent solution of the problem.

Christian Science Monitor: That there is some truth in the contention of William J. Schieffelin, chairman of the Citizens' Union, expressed at a luncheon of the Metric Association in New York, that the general adoption of the metric system of weights and measures would aid in promoting international good will, cannot be denied. Whether, however, as he assured his hearers, a uniform system of weights and measures the world over would do much toward paving the way to an international language, seems somewhat doubtful. Every reform which makes for greater harmony between the nations of the world is praiseworthy, but it is well for its advocates to see to it that it does not lead them off too far into the realms of imagination.

New York Times: When the board of overseers of Harvard university decided this week that neither race nor religion should be a bar to admission, it also advocated taking measures to make Harvard more truly nationally representative than it has been. During the last half century it has grown from a small New England college into one of the great universities of the country, but the geographical origin of its student body has remained preponderantly what it was.

Chicago Daily News: At least one country — Canada—acknowledges the shame it feels over the part some of its nationals are playing in the conspiracy to defeat the prohibition laws [illegible] United States. Throughout the dominion, according to a despatch from Montreal to the Daily News, the higher officials express regret that Canadian citizens should be engaged in an unworthy plot that tends to weaken respect for all law in a friendly neighboring country.

SPIRIT of the STATE PRESS

The best piece of publicity any community ever gets is its local newspaper. Very few people ever select a town like Watsonville to live in without first sending for copies of the daily papers. They know that the newspapers reflect the entire community life. If they are dull and colorless; if they are poorly edited and poorly printed; if they are poorly patronized by the merchants; if they retail community rows; if they are spiteful and nagging, and pessimistic in tone, the prospective settler avoids the town as if it had an epidemic. —Watsonville Register.

The biggest single publicity move for the welfare of San Luis Obispo County is being undertaken. A large number of citizens are on a four-day tour of that portion of the San Joaquin valley immediately adjacent to this coast region, for the purpose of forging a link of mutual interest between them and specifically for the promotion and early securing of transportation route connecting the two sections and the two state highways which run independently through them, known as the Cholame lateral.—Morning Obispan.

PERSONAL HEALTH SERVICE

By WILLIAM BRADY, M. D.
Noted Physician and Author.

PRESUMPTION OF GUILT.

If health and life were as highly regarded and as carefully guarded by our police as is property, any person found going about with something purporting to be a "cold" unmuzzled would be subject to arrest and isolation as a suspicious character. Free and unpremeditated shooting is acquiring the dignity of a popular sport in America. The morbidity and mortality attributable to this pastime are as nothing compared with the frightful amount of sickness and the enormous death rate from disease spread by persons who go about unmuzzled when they have what purports to be "colds."

The two dozen different diseases which commonly masquerade, at least at the onset, as "just colds," and which are most infectious, most likely to spread, in the stage of onset, are all communicable in the spray of moisture which carries for a distance of four feet from the face when the individual talks without a mask or muzzle to catch the spray. Therefore, any one coming down with any of these two dozen respiratory infections and kidding himself and the community with the notion that it is perhaps "just a cold," is likely to give his disease, whatevery it may prove to be, to persons who happen to come within five feet of his face while he is talking, if he wears no mask or muzzle.

I said two dozen different diseases masquerade in the stage of onset as "just colds." Let us run over the list once more, just to remind suspicious characters that we know enough to realize what has happened when we have been infected, and perhaps to make us hesitate a little about blaming our plight on an imaginary change of weather or undershirt or a stray draft or a wetting of our feet last week—this is the humorous side of the situation; it is certainly funny how some people fall to cussing the weather.

Diseases Which Masquerade as "Colds"—At First.

(1) Measles, (2) whooping cough, (3) mumps, (4) scarlet fever, (5) German measles, (6) chicken pox, (7) smallpox, (8) grippe, (9) influenza, (10) pneumonia, (11) diphtheria, (12) tuberculosis, (13) infantile paralysis, (14) pneumonic plague—not yet in America, (15) coryza—alias "cold in head," (16) simple sore throat, (17) tonsillitis, (18) quinsy, (19) laryngitis, (20) sinusitis, (21) adenoiditis, (22) middle ear inflammation, (23) mastoiditis, (24) pleurisy, (25) bronchitis.

The first 14 diseases named are of a specific kind, that is, the virus or germs, passing from person to person in the moisture spray or discharges from nose and throat, will produce only the same disease. The other disease conditions are not specific, which makes it all the more interesting, for the virus or germs of Smith's bronchitis or quinsy may cause either of these diseases or sinusitis or coryza when poor Jones gets in the way of Smith's barrage.

No one under heaven can positively at the onset of an alleged "cold" which of the foregoing two dozen diseases it is going to be. Therefore, it is extremely inconsiderate for any one purporting to have "just a cold" to approach within five feet of other persons unmuzzled.

Another Whack at Lawyers.

During the course of a trial some years ago, a witness was asked by the prosecuting attorney if he knew what it meant to take an oath.

He replied:

"To take an oath means that you swear to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

"What happens if you do not tell the truth?" asked the judge.

"If you do not tell the truth, your Honor," replied the witness "it means that you are dishonored in the sight of God, dishonored in the sight of man—in fact, you are dishonored in the sight of everyone except lawyers."—Everybody's.

QUARTER OF COMMUNITY CHEST FUND RAISED IN THREE DAYS

$123,682 IS SUBSCRIBED FOR CHARITY

Workers Devise Answer for Those Who Give Alibi of Preferring to Make Gifts to Individuals in Need

With more than one-quarter of the goal—$486,396—subscribed, the Oakland Community Chest campaign workers will renew their efforts on Monday with every prospect of obtaining the remaining sum by the end of the campaign period which has been fixed as Friday. The amount of money reported subscribed to date is $123,682. This sum represents three days' work on the part of 40 per cent of the workers. As a consequence, campaign officials are optimistic concerning the ultimate results of their work.

The daily luncheon rallies of workers has become a feature of the campaign, a clearinghouse for experiences.

ANSWER FOR ALIBI

During the early part of the week numerous reports were made at the luncheons of factories and individuals who refused to contribute to the campaign. These reports were made public and volunteers were asked for to handle the cases. Yesterday it was announced that in every instance volunteers had succeeded in changing the attitude of the individuals and establishments complained of and that contributions had been received from them. A method of handling the situation created by prospects who say that they prefer to give their money direct was suggested at the Friday luncheon. Campaign Manager Lynn Mowat declared that arrangements were under way to publish the names of all such individuals for the information of those who need charity.

"If these people feel that they have a better way, it is no more than right that people who need charity should know that these people believe in giving their money directly to those in need," explained Mowat.

As a result of the first four days of the campaign but sixteen districts remain to be canvassed. Piedmont went over the top on Friday, with a quota of 113 per cent. Mrs. Wallace Alexander, the colonel of the district, was called upon for a speech, and pointing to the blackboard containing the district figures, said: "I think that is enough without a speech."

The standing of the other districts in the city, with reference to the percentage of the amount of money raised follows:

District 1		9 per cent
District 2		10 per cent
District 3		62 per cent
District 4		14 per cent

Satisfaction was expressed at Community Chest headquarters with the high per capita given by the employees of the various Oakland business houses and industries. This ranges from $6 to $10 per person, and if this average is maintained it is declared the employees per capita in Oakland will exceed that of any other Community Chest city in the country.

Ousted Chest Worker Hits Merchant; Collects $20

Fisticuffs and alibis are adding unwonted zest to the collection of funds for the Community Chest, with the result that the campaign is expected to reach its goal ahead of schedule, according to reports turned in at headquarters.

"Every time one of our workers volplanes out of a store with a momentum created by a well-aimed kick it makes all the rest of us so darn sore that we go back after the booter and get twice as much as we wanted in the first place."

That's what Lynn Mowatt, campaign manager, says, and he means it for a tip to those who renege on their ante.

Today a worker for the city's charity fund picked himself up out of a gutter, whence he had been escorted by the proprietor of a downtown store. The worker dashed right back into the store and peremptorily socked the proprietor right in the eye.

There seems to be little doubt about it: the Community Chest is going over with a punch.

Anyway, the proprietor got angry and called the police and a number of bad names.

"Why don't you get out of here?" shrilled he to the worker.

"I'd just as soon the police know my side of the story as yours," rejoined our hero.

Whereupon the merchant dug deep for $20, and telephoned the police not to discontinue their pinochle on his account.

The alibi complex is reported to be generally distributed throughout the city, but methods employed by the solicitors of the cents are proving a good treatment. The workers say it isn't because the people want to donate to the chest; it is just a natural reluctance to spending money without an argument.

"All they want is an argument and then they contribute with a free hand," says E. F. Garrison, county auditor, in telling how to meet the alibi contingent. "We have plenty of what they want," he adds.

Employees of the Howard Terminal are so accustomed to juggling large cases and containers that to them the Community Chest is a bagatelle. The 81 employees of this organization contributed an average of $10 each, or the highest individual percentage to be recorded by any Oakland firm in the charity campaign. The Brenner employees have had considerable experience along the same line, so they hung up the second record for themselves. They checked in an average of over $6 for each employee. And, by the same token, the employees of the Western Casket Company were among the first to establish a hundred per cent mark for the campaign.

Joseph Bobba played an accordion at the luncheon of the Community Chest workers yesterday. Joseph J. Rosborough, postmaster, said he thought it harmonized with the luncheon better than a fiddle or a piano, and that all they had to do now was to figure out some way to eliminate the splashing.

Charles H. Seccombe, attorney and speaker at the luncheon, seems to have expressed the sentiments of the workers most accurately.

"It's bully sport to build a city," said he, "and working for the chest gives the grandest thrill of the game."

S. P. GIVES LAND TO OPEN AVENUE

ALAMEDA, April 21.—The Southern Pacific company and the Central Pacific company presented the city of Alameda today the deed to a strip of property which will permit the city to extend Versailles avenue.

A similar deed was given the city some months ago by Mrs. Wallace Alexander.

The only piece of land necessary to complete the proposed road extension is a strip owned by Cohen Estate. The deed to this property will be obtained in near future, according to William Locke, city attorney.

The opening up of Versailles avenue will mean benefit to Oakland as well as Alameda. It is proposed to extend Versailles avenue, now terminating some two blocks distant, through to the estuary crossing, making a direct roadway from East Fourteenth street, Oakland, to Central avenue and the bay in Alameda.

U. S. Girl to Divorce Poet in England

LOS ANGELES, April 21.—James Henry Worthington, minor English poet and reputed heir to an estate valued at about $1,600,000, has been sued for separate maintenance here by Mrs. Effiel Worthington, formerly Miss Effiel Johnson of Pasadena, Cal.

Mrs. Worthington, who says her husband is now at his ancestral home, Wycombe Court, Lane End, High Wycombe, Eng., accuses him of cruelty and non-support and brings the name of Sonia Vaseljova, Russian poetess, into her complaint.

RENEWAL OF NAVAL BASE OFFER URGED

Extension of Time Limit Is Advocated by Congressman MacLafferty; Vote May Be Set May Election

For Alameda to fail to extend the time limit on its offer to the government of its 5000-acre naval base site would be to defeat the purposes of the navy, and perhaps endanger the safety of the nation, according to a telegram received by The TRIBUNE from Representative James H. MacLafferty.

"The navy department, which is responsible for the nation's first line of defense in time of war, has determined unqualifiedly that the great naval base for the Pacific must be located on San Francisco bay at Alameda," MacLafferty wired. "If this is to be done, the people of Alameda must vote to extend the time during which our government can avail itself of the gift of the site."

TERMS OF OFFER.

The terms of the offer made by Alameda three years ago provide that it shall hold good only until January 1 of next year. It will be impossible for the government to accept it before that time, however, since Congress does not again assemble until shortly prior to that date.

The only way the offer can now be made available to the government and the navy department is for the citizens of Alameda to extend the time limit by means of an election to be held May 8. It is proposed to extend it to January 1, 1925.

MacLafferty pointed out in his telegram the urgent importance of giving the government the opportunity of utilizing the Alameda site for its Pacific Coast naval base.

"The report of the Rodman board, recently handed down, which gives the national policy for our defense, says it is imperative that the base be established at Alameda," the telegram states. "The whole influence of the government at Washington is behind the project.

DUTY OF CALIFORNIANS.

"It is not unlikely that the next great war will be on the Pacific. Today there is no place on the Pacific where our fleet can be reconditioned and supplied with the necessities enabling it to keep the sea. If our Pacific coast is some day to bear the brunt of an attack, it is the duty of every Californian to bend every effort to enable the government to commence the development of the base at Alameda.

"Let us not lose the benefit of the hard work that has been done during the last few years, and particularly the untiring effort of my predecessor, Mr. Elston.

"This is now an opportunity where consolidated action can accomplish a great national service, and where the results will redound to the benefit of our State in increased activity and securer defense of our American civilization."

Dahlia Expert Is Defendant in Suit

Carl Salbach, 6088 Hillegass avenue, well known as a dahlia grower, is today a defendant in two suits for an aggregate of $17,587.50 damages as the result of an automobile collision on April 22, 1922, at Eleventh and Harrison streets. The plaintiffs are Charles W. Dempster, driver of the other machine, who asks $10,000 for injuries and $87.50 for damage to his machine, and Mrs. William N. Martin, a passenger in the Dempster machine, who asks $7500 for injuries. Salbach is charged with negligent and reckless driving.

EBELL CLUB NOMINATES NEW HEADS

Complete Change in Control of Pioneer Body Will Be Result If Ticket Wins At Election On March 1

The Ebell club will have a complete change of administration if the regular ticket reaching the 600 members of the pioneer club today is elected at the annual meeting on Tuesday, May 1. Mrs. John J. Valentine is nominated for the presidency to succeed Mrs. George Rothganger who is completing her first term. No director who had a seat on this year's board has been placed as a candidate on the regular ticket.

Mrs. Minna McGauley and Mrs. Charles H. King are nominated for the vice presidencies to succeed Mrs. George C. Pardee and Mrs. Wickham Havens. Mrs. W. H. Kent is candidate for the recording secretaryship, now held by Mrs. G. Howard Robinson; Mrs. I. N. Hibbard for the financial secretaryship now held by Mrs. Frank M. Hurd; Mrs. Arthur K. Munson for the corresponding secretaryship now held by Mrs. Richard H. Genung. Mrs. W. H. Harrington is nominated treasurer to succeed Mrs. Ergo A. Majors. Mrs. George C. Davis for secretary of publications and Mrs. Samuel W. Burtchaell for the general curatorship, complete the ticket. These offices have been held this year by Mrs. Clarence Johnston and Mrs. Mildred F. Husbands.

Five members of the membership committee will be elected at the annual meeting. The nominations are as follows: Mrs. George B. M. Gray, Mrs. John A. Beckwith, Mrs. Raymond L. Levensaler, Mrs. William R. Davis, Mrs. Frank E. Hinckley.

Mrs. Valentine is a past president of the Oakland Young Women's Christian Association. Mrs. McGauley, who is named to the first vice presidency, is a past president of the Ebell club.

A report of its stewardship for the past year is appended to the May calendar of events by the retiring board of Ebell. Improvements to the amount of $7084.50 have been made in the Harrison street building, with an additional expenditure of $2851.11 in renewal of equipment. The equipment expenses have been met in full, with $1000 paid on the improvement debt, according to the statement. Attention is called to the fact that whereas receipts from rentals last year averaged $450 monthly, the present year has raised this average to $788.

DRY AGENTS SUSPENDED

12-Year Search Brings Fortune To Oakland Man

Yesterday William A. Paterson, a former employee of the Southern Pacific company, was a rolling stone quite noticeably lacking in moss, and his residence, a lonely shack near Redwood Peak, occasioned no neighborhood gossip. But

Today Paterson is an heir to a million-dollar estate in Scotland; he no longer toils in the commissary department of the railroad; the scattered community of Redwood Peak is fairly aglow with back-fence speculation, because he has checked out of the shack, leaving the forwarding address "Stonehouse, Lanarkshire, Scotland."

While Paterson has toiled up and down the world in a soldier of fortune sort of career, trustees of his uncle's estate for twelve years have been directing a world-wide search for him, according to F. A. Cooke, manager of the General Efficiency company, in charge of the successful search on the Pacific Coast. Cooke brought the news to Paterson that his uncle, James Naismith, died twelve years ago and bequeathed a large portion of his princely estate to Paterson.

When he first left Scotland, Paterson traveled to Central America. After a considerable time spent in Panama he made his residence in Mexico. Later, he said, when the war broke out he enlisted as a member of Company A, 37th United States Engineers. He was mustered out of the service in 1919 and decided to make his home in Oakland. During all this time he had not communicated with his old home and was unaware of the fortune that awaited him.

Paterson is preparing to return to Scotland to claim his heritage.

FRANCE DEMANDS DIVORCEE'S SONS

LOS ANGELES, April 21.—Mrs. Marie Josephine Perier, California heiress, has been granted a divorce from Henri Perier, said to be a blood relative of Casimir Perier, famous French financier and once premier of France. She charged willful neglect, and Perier did not contest the action. The French government, however, took a hand. It was represented by the French consul, who demanded the couple's sons, Jacques, 13 years old, and Claude, 11, both born in France, and therefore, he contended, French citizens and required to serve in the French army, be sent to that country.

Mrs. Perier's attorney argued the divorce automatically made the children American citizens.

Judge William Doran of the superior court took the question under advisement.

C. OF C. TO HEAD TRIP INTO NAPA

Vallejo, Napa, St. Helena and Calistoga to Be Visited by Get-Acquainted Party Leaving Oakland May 10

Complete plans for the Chamber of Commerce Get-Acquainted excursion into Vallejo and the Napa Valley were formulated at a meeting of the get-acquainted excursion committee at the Hotel Oakland today. Dates for the trip have been finally fixed at May 10 and 11 and the itinerary will include Vallejo, Napa, St. Helena and Calistoga in the order named. Vallejo and Napa are the stops scheduled for the first day, St. Helena and Calistoga are on the second day's program. The one night out will be spent at Napa.

Due to the fact that sleeping accommodations at Napa are limited, the committee has placed 75 as the maximum to be carried on this trip. Reservations will be accepted in the order received until that number has been reached.

The program includes a luncheon at Mare Island navy yard on Thursday, May 10; dinner at Napa the same day and luncheon on the second day at Calistoga. At Vallejo, the Chamber of Commerce and the Rotary club will unite in acting as hosts. At Napa, the Chamber of Commerce and Kiwanis club will receive the guests and at Calistoga the Chambers of Commerce of both Calistoga and St. Helena will join in acting as hosts.

A tour of the navy yard is provided at Vallejo and automobile trips have been arranged for at Napa, St. Helena and Calistoga. The committee in charge of arrangements is headed by William H. Mayhew. Max Greenberg heads the special committee in charge of this trip.

Other Women Named In Divorce Appeal

Other women entered the life of Morris E. Brazill, Hayward dairy owner, according to Minnie E. Brazill, who filed suit for divorce against him in the superior court today.

Mrs. Brazill alleges that, although her husband has owned an automobile for a considerable period of time, he never allowed her to ride in the car and has consistently refused to take her or their daughter out with him. Mrs. Brazill asks custody of the child and $200 a month alimony.

Preliminary to the hearing, Mrs. Brazill secured a restraining order tying up her husband's property, including stock in the Willow Brook dairy ranch. The couple were married in Hayward, April 7, 1913, and separated July 31, 1922.

Optimists' Club Listens to Speech

First hand information of how the gambling casino is conducted at Monte Carlo, in the province of Monaco, was furnished members of the Optimists' club at their luncheon at the Hotel Oakland today by Gwilt, who spoke on his experiences on his recent trip throughout Europe and Egypt. The speaker gave a brief outline of the places he visited, and told of an airplane flight he made from Paris to London. Most of his address, however, was on Monte Carlo.

"A company rents the Casino at Monte Carlo, and the gambling privilege from the Prince of Monaco for $3,000,000 a year," said Gwilt. "Without doubt it is the most orderly conducted gambling establishment in the world. The doors open at 10 o'clock in the morning and close promptly at 11 o'clock at night. There is never any trouble or excitement."

MOTORSHIP HERE TO TAKE FRUITS TO SCANDINAVIA

Large Shipment of Canned Goods Being Loaded at the Howard Terminal.

The Swedish motorship San Francisco made a return visit to Oakland today on her way to European and Scandinavian ports with a general cargo collected in Puget Sound. The big motor vessel is at the Howard terminal taking on a large shipment of canned goods and other general merchandise, the product of Oakland factories and packing plants.

The San Francisco is one of the original motorship visitors to San Francisco bay and was the first ship of her type to visit Oakland harbor several years ago.

Since the advent of this vessel into the Pacific Coast trade in 1915 the increase of motor-driven ships has been considerable and, from all appearances, the growth of this type is just at its start. Economy of operation and increase of cargo space are big factors in support of the use of the motor vessels.

Owing to the fact that many of the motorships are being equipped with refrigerators for handling fresh fruit, this industry has grown to a great extent during the past year. The north European countries are large consumers of California and other West Coast fruits and nearly all the steamship lines have made special preparation for increased handling.

Teachers Condemn Attack on Officials

SANTA ROSA, April 21.—Condemnation of Governor Richardson's criticism of the state school system is voiced in a resolution adopted by 150 teachers of the Santa Rosa high school district, and published here. The resolution, adopted following a talk Thursday night by Will C. Wood, state superintendent of public instruction, says in part:

"We deprecate the mercenary spirit that is willing to subordinate the proper education of our children to material things that have as their ultimate object only the acquirement of more wealth."

The resolution goes on to say that, "We heartily disapprove the charge that the school administration constitutes a political oligarchy" and that "we disapprove of every effort to nullify or weaken the teachers' tenure law."

Instruction in Shipping Is to Be U.C. Course

Series of Ten Lectures to Deal With All the Phases of Water Shipping.

A course of instruction covering the general resume of the shipping business is to be given under the auspices of the Extension Division of the University of California beginning Friday, April 20, at 7:30 p. m., in room 237, Merchants Exchange building, San Francisco. The course is entitled "Shipping Practice," and will cover such subjects as the history and organization of maritime commerce; the commission of a vessel and the steps necessary to prepare it for its maiden voyage; the rights and safeguards of ship personnel; a discussion of the various shipping documents required by the United States and foreign governments; limitations and liabilities; wharf administration; stevedoring; traffic management; general average and salvage; and the administration of the United States navigation laws.

Norman F. Titus, of the McCormick Steamship Company, has been selected as the instructor. Titus will deliver ten 1½-hour lectures, and will draw upon his wide experience with the shipping business to make the course interesting to anyone who wishes to learn of the practical phases of this all important industry.

Instruction in shipping practice follows an interesting course in ships and shipping, which has just been completed and which was attended by a large and representative group of men connected with the shipping industry in the bay region. Arrangements have been made for a considerable attendance in the new course and indications point to a large enrollment. Registrations are now being received at the office of the University Extension.

DEVIL DRIFTS TO SEA; KICKED OFF SHIP BY CHINESE

Good Luck Ceremony Held by Crew of Departing Ship in North.

SEATTLE, April 21.—With 80 first-class passengers and 230 in the steerage the steamship President Madison of the Admiral-Oriental Line departed for the Orient this morning. To bring luck to the Chinese in the steerage and to rid the ship of the devil, the Chinese members of the crew at the departure held an Oriental ceremony. The casting of the devil adrift on a plank after the setting off of an appropriate amount of firecrackers constituted the principal part of the ritual.

The appointment of Captain Charles Clarkson of Seattle to become surveyor at Grays Harbor for the Pacific Coast Board of Marine Underwriters, to become effective May 1, has been made. The appointment is designed to take care of the increasing traffic at Grays Harbor.

Destined for Callao via Port Angeles, Grays Harbor and the Columbia river, the steamship Menon of the General Steamship Corporation's west coast South American service left here today. At Port Angeles the vessel will load 1,000,000 feet of lumber and 100 tons of shooks, leaving space for a similar quantity at Grays Harbor.

The arrival of the 5-masted schooner Vigilant at Tatoosh Island yesterday morning, 16 days out from Los Angeles, led to alarm for the safety of the barkentine Alta which left Los Angeles February 20, and has not been reported since. The vessel is a British sailing ship 263 feet long and carries a crew of 22.

REMARRIAGE OF ARTIST PETERS IS NOW FORECAST

Painter of Nocturnes May Bring Home Divorced Wife On Yacht.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 21.—The more audacious members of the Bohemian club of this city are curiously attempting to pry from Charles Rollo Peters, patron of the arts and master of nocturnes, the reason for his rejected voyage from New York to Europe on his yacht Constance, because they think he is bent on an Odyssey of romance in order to bring back his divorced wife, who is on a painting tour in England.

Peters is taciturn, after the mood of his celebrated midnight paintings. "I am sailing from New York on May 6," said he, "and when I reach the other side of the Atlantic I can only say that my private affairs are my own."

But he has not explained why the yacht he recently purchased has been scored off the shipping registers as the Esperanto, and has been renamed the Constance. Friends remember that his wife's name was Constance, and the sum of their two-plus-two operation is that a reconciliation has been effected.

Peters' farewell exhibition of paintings is closing at the Bohemian club this week. He will leave here soon to give an exhibition in New York, following which he will order the Constance out to sea.

Mr. and Mrs. Peters were married at Monterey in April, fourteen years ago. She secured a divorce in 1920, alleging that the moody character of his paintings entered too much into their domestic life. Mrs. Peters is a successful landscape painter.

Turlock Shipper Gets Judgment in Court

TURLOCK, April 21.—A case of importance to fruit shippers was determined in the Superior Court when Judge Fulkerth gave judgment for Dalton E. Cross, Turlock shipper, in an action that involved the attachment of the property of bondsmen to a contract on account of the alleged failure of the shipper to complete the contract, the major case not having been before the court. The case of the attachments was challenged as far back as December by Cross. This case originated out of a claim by H. L. Woods, of Modesto, for $60,000 for alleged breach of contract in the non-delivery of grapes last season. Cross alleges that he was unable to deliver the grapes as there were no cars available, and that such a contingency was provided for in his contract. Despite that provision Woods went ahead and attached everything of Cross' and his bondsmen, and they have been tied up for five months until the judgment above was rendered. Cross has filed a cross complaint against Woods for $60,000, alleging a breach of contract.

He crawled a distance of a mile to the eastern edge of town, where Policemen Bone and Shotin found him and rushed him to the office of Dr. A. R. Powers, who administered treatment and removed him to the hospital. DeLong stated he had been held up and robbed of $156 in Fresno and was on his way back to San Francisco.

The Oakland Tribune is a member of The Association of Newspaper Classified Advertising Managers, which includes leading newspapers throughout the country and has for its aim the elimination of fraudulent and misleading classified advertising. The Oakland Tribune, as well as every other member of the Association, endeavors to print only truthful Want-ads and will appreciate having its attention called to any advertisement not conforming to the highest standards of honesty.

Want Ad Section INDEX

Want Ad Classifications appear in numerical order, and all related classes are grouped together. For example: All advertising of Rooms To Let is numbered 20 to 29. The numbers appear on the headings, so if you seek room and board look through the "20s;" "Board" is No. 25, and always follows "Housekeeping Rooms (24)." Note—Every "For Sale" or "To Let" heading has a "Wanted" classification with the same number, but followed by the letter "A".

Why not eliminate the element of doubt by immediately consulting Fong Wan, a reliable herb specialist of established reputation. Not only was he the founder of the Fong & Lee Herb Co. of Santa Rosa, but also of the Fong Wan Herb Co. of Oakland, the largest in America today.

Fong Wan is a business man of recognized ability. Thousands of sufferers have been relieved by him. People came from all parts of the Pacific coast to consult him, and he has printed the greatest number of testimonials of any herbalist in the Oakland dailies.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:
I take this method of expressing my sentiments of appreciation to Dr. Wong Him for the wonderful cures he has effected in cases where several members of my family, including myself, were afflicted with various maladies.

I also desire to be the means of guiding anyone who is in need of medical advice, as he will find Dr. Wong Him to be a thoroughly reliable health specialist and absolutely conscientious. Through an occurrence experienced by a member of my family I can, with the greatest regard for sincerity, state that after a consultation, unless Dr. Wong Him is convinced that his herbs will effect a complete cure, he will under no circumstances accept the case.

Very truly yours,

JUBILEE'S PARDNER

by Judd Mortimer Lewis

Illustrations by Edwina

It soaked him back of his right hand ear.

When I had let Jubilee down by the rope in his teeth and had put on my short britches and went downstairs, and went out in the yard with the milk pail, it was misting a little.

None of the bunch had come so I thought I would play a trick on them. I turned the cow around and tied her so that her hind legs were right by the manure hole. Then I started to milk her.

The Lost Bag of Tripe was the first one that came and poked his face in the manure hole. He went bang up against the cow's hind legs, and she cracked loose with both of them, only when her feet got there. The Tripe's face was not. Pretty soon he came in the front door of the barn. He had went around the block.

He thought that was a good trick, and he watched the manure hole and told me he heard someone coming. The next one was Nibs, and the cow missed him, too.

I thought I had better put the cow back where she was used to being by that time, because it looked like she was aiming better than at first and she might land on the next foot that came through. If she did it would be hard on the face.

When I had strained the milk and fed up the bunch was there and we went over to the brickyard and hid our shoes in the toolhouse and paddled around in the mud a while. Then we went over to the school house and tried to get Mush to go with us some place.

He was painting the floor and his wife told us to get out and let him alone. The Lost Bag of Tripe said all right we would go, and he walked across the part of the floor Mush had painted and Mush's wife hollered at him.

Mush twisted around to see what she was hollering about and his foot turned over his can of paint and he flung the brush at the Lost Bag of Tripe just as he was going out of the door. It soaked him back of his right hand ear and we all skun out. When I looked back, as I was going out of the door Mush was setting in the paint looking after us like a big fat baby.

After that we were going to go to the breakwater but when we got as far as Irish Town we got chased back by some micks. So we went to Hoppers and made a kitjiell and Hopper's mother gave him some money for some string, and we took turns holding the kite till it was milking time.

I bet Mush's wife is so mad she will want to do something to us Monday morning. We went back to the brickyard and put on our shoes and stockings. Then I went home and had to mind Annabelle Lee till supper was ready.

When it came 9 o'clock my ant asted me if I had forgot it was my bedtime. So then I went upstairs. My feet was kinda muddy when I put my stockings on, but I do not have to wash them till I go barefoot regular.

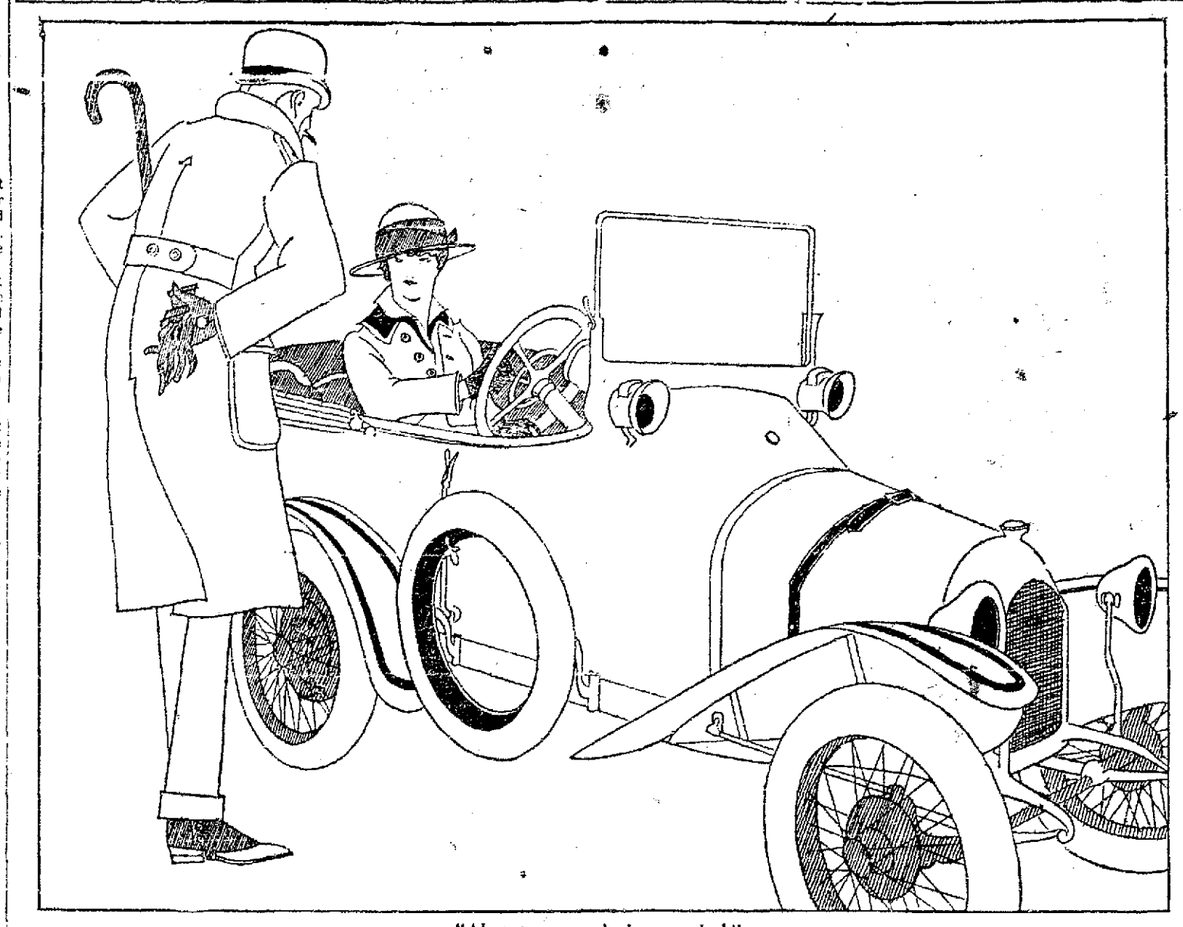

Tomorrow is Sunday.

ALONG THE AVENUE

Illustrated by Lawrence Fellows

By J. A. Waldron

"'Just two years,' she remarked."

EPISODES THAT DON'T COUNT.

HIS eyes met hers and recognition was immediate. She turned her car from the procession and drew up to the curb, where he joined her.

"Just two years," she remarked.

"Two years to a day," he replied. "That was the period I fixed, you'll remember."

"When did you return? Weren't you going to look me up?"

"I got in this morning. 'Phoned an hour ago. You were out."

"Come!" She thrust an extra wrap and a robe from the seat beside her. "Get in, please. We've something to talk about."

"Quite a lot." He climbed into her car. She swung back into the procession on the avenue and at the next corner took a less crowded way and ran under the speed limit.

"You remember when we last rode together?" She looked up at him smiling. "I called you too sentimental."

"Because I wouldn't marry you, though I loved you."

"And I rebelled, holding you weren't to blame because the trustee of your father's estate had stolen your patrimony."

"Yet you remember my answer, when you asked me if I would have married you if you had lost your money instead? Two years isn't long, after all; but we had better remind each other of all that conversation."

"Yes. You said then you would have felt like a beggar living on my bounty. It really was nonsense—a foolish fastidiousness."

"But I'm of the same opinion still."

"I'm still of the other opinion. I don't see why two persons who care for each other need concern themselves about what others think."

"I'll grant you that as a natural proposition. But we can't deal with life upon the natural impulse that survives. Life is artificial. Civilization has erected certain hazards that control. We have inherited habits and prejudices, and are victims of environment. I didn't want any of your intimates to say behind your back that you had taken pity on me. Nor did I want any of my intimates—for your sake as well as my own—to raise their eyebrows behind my back. Even friends, you know, are deceitful in some things. Our artificial life breeds duplicity."

"But you were wrong in one thing."

"In what?"

"In insisting when you went away to Alaska to win fortune! . . ."

"A foolish venture these days. Oblivion is the surer end of such an enterprise."

"Don't interrupt. In insisting that we shouldn't write each other. That we should be silent for two years, at the end of which you would come back, or I should consider you lost. That was wrong. Life is too complex these days, according to your own argument, to put affection away somewhere under a time lock and expect nothing will happen."

"That I myself have learned. But I thought letters to and fro in the circumstances would serve only to promote despondency. I had no definite hope of fortune."

"Yet it came to you. I heard of it. And the manner in which it came no doubt strengthened your idea that silence was wise."

"Then you knew I married out there?"

"Yes. The last place in the world I supposed a man could marry—to advantage."

"How much did you hear?"

"The bare fact. That you had married a mine—or the woman owner of a mine. A simple paragraph in a Nome newspaper. It was shown me by a friend."

"Might I ask his name? I assume it was a man."

"Assumption correct. Harry Dilworth."

"Dilworth? I used to know a young fellow of that name. Wasn't he a star football player?"

"Yes. I married him the next day, under cumulative excitements—propinquity and all that."

"'Propinquity and all that' is a bit indefinite, isn't it?"

"Well, enthusiasm over athletic feats, then — something which perhaps at the moment induced a reversion to the primitive impulse of woman — the submissive impulse. And not the least among the influences that moved me was that paragraph in the Nome newspaper. But perhaps my springs of action are uninteresting. How about yours?"

"I shall be just as candid. If I hadn't been lucky I shouldn't be back here. I stopped the robbery—perhaps worse—of one of the richest of the Alaska operators. He had been set upon by footpads. He gave me a chance to make money."

"And after all you didn't need the mine woman?"

"Well, she was attractive. There are few attractive women out there. And she was unusually clever. Developed her mine without masculine bossing. They called her 'Lone-hand Kate.' And she decided to marry me."

"And you were weak enough to succumb without a struggle?"

The car's speed was greatly accelerated here.

"Not exactly that. At a crucial moment I saw a paragraph—quite a long paragraph—in a ragged bit of a New York newspaper, chronicling your wedding."

They rode in silence for a time.

"I suppose your wife is with you?"

"No. It turned out that she hadn't divorced a man she married before she met me."

"So you got a divorce?"

"Even that formality was unnecessary."

The car slowed down. "One gets but fragments of news from fragments of newspapers."

"True. And yet newspapers are enterprising. Suppose that by chance Mr. Dilworth should see me riding with you?"

"That wouldn't matter, I assure you."

"No?"

"No. I divorced him three months ago."

My Marriage Problems

Odele Garrison's New Phase Of

Revelations of a Wife

THE WAY THE MAN SMITH FOUND THE CODE INTACT

The sound of a key turning in the lock of the antique desk told me that Katie was obeying Smith's injunction to open the desk where Lillian had put the eyeglass case which had decoyed the man back into the trap set for him. A slight shuffling noise meant that the girl was fumbling for the absurd secret drawer which puzzled nobody, and then Katie's voice sounded again.

"Here ees ting dey hid. Tes eet vot you vant?"

"Don't ask questions—" he added a slighting epithet, and I, used to Katie's excitable temperament, wondered if she would be able to remain perfectly calm under the insult.

But either from a remembrance of her duty as an "actress" or from genuine fear of the man Smith, Katie uttered no sound, and then there was the quick, impatient tearing of paper as Smith fumbled with the clumsy brown wrappings in which Lillian purposely had tied the case.

KATIE PLAYS HER PART.

"Ah!" A sibilant intake of the breath and the single exclamation told me that Smith had reached the case, and I guessed from the tiny beam of light which came underneath the draperies that Katie was holding the flashlight for him.

"Here, you!" His voice was brutal, all the more so because he kept it at so low a pitch. "I do not choose that you see any more for awhile. Come here. Hold the light in front of you till I bind your eyes."

"Vot?" The exclamation broke from Katie, but was quickly changed to a little cry of pain. Smith must have struck or kicked or pinched her, and I exercised every bit of self-control I possessed to keep from rushing into the room to Katie's aid. But my common sense told me that if the girl obeyed him implicitly he would not hurt her while she was still of use to him in showing him the way about the house. So I remained at my post, filled with a primitive longing to reach the sinister figure in the next room and mete out to him a brutality equal to his own.

SMITH IS JUBILANT.

"You will get worse than that if you speak or move again without my permission." Smith said menacingly, and I heard a little strangled sob in Katie's throat which meant terrified obedience.

"There!" The single word came after a few seconds' silence, evidently devoted to binding the girl's eyes. "Now give me that flash, and lie down on the floor, full length, arms crossed, face in arms. Quick. That's better. I could soon teach you obedience. Your mistress has spoiled you. Now, if you lift your head or make any other movement until I give you permission you will get another little caress like this."

"This" must have been a kick. I heard a smothered moan from Katie, and took an involuntary step toward the draperies which separated me from my faithful little maid, then remembered that one of the vital points in Lillian's plan was to have Smith discover that the queer thin papers behind the secret lining of the eyeglass case apparently had not been disturbed. If Katie lay motionless—as I was sure she would—she was safe from further injury until he had finished his investigation, and any movement of mine would upset Lillian's whole plan.

Smith seated himself deliberately in a chair—I heard the springs creak as his weight settled into it. Then there came to my ears the rustling of paper, and I knew that by the aid of the flashlight he was examining the papers.

I held my breath and strained my ears to hear his first word. He believed himself to be alone except for Katie, who was, in his opinion, patently a negligible quantity. That he would express joy or chagrin, I believed, and was justified when I heard a low chuckle.

"Stupid swine!" he said. "Under their eyes, and they could not see it! Ah! My little beauty!" I judged that he was apostrophizing the sound of her clumsy stumbling to her feet.

Uncle Wiggily

Howard R. Garis

UNCLE WIGGILY AND THE BALLOON.

"Uncle Wiggily, are you going to be very busy this morning?" asked a voice at the door of the bunny rabbit gentleman's hollow stump bungalow one day.

"Hello! Who are you? Are you the Fuzzy Fox asking to know if I'll have time to get my ears nibbled?" inquired Uncle Wiggily, pretending to be frightened, for well he knew it wasn't the Fox.

"I'm Baby Bunty," was the answer, "and if you aren't too busy could I go with you, Uncle Wiggily."

"Oh, ho! So you are Baby Bunty, are you?" laughed the rabbit uncle. "Well, come right in! I'm not so

"I'm in luck this day—two rabbits!" gurgled the Gator very busy. I'm just going adventuring; that's all. Where do you want to go, Baby Bunty?"

"Down to the toy store, if you please," answered Baby Bunty, who was a little rabbit girl. "I'm going to buy a balloon."

"A balloon!" exclaimed Uncle Wiggily. "Are you going to sail away in your balloon as I sail in my air ship?"

"Oh, no, it isn't that kind of a balloon," answered Baby Bunty. "I want to get a toy balloon, that you blow up full of air as big as a pumpkin. Only you mustn't blow it too big, Uncle Wiggily, or the ballon will burst."

"That's right, Baby Bunty, we mustn't blow the balloon too big," agreed Uncle Wiggily. "Well, come along, we'll go to the toy store."

"Well, I never saw such goings on in all my life!" exclaimed Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy when Uncle Wiggily was hopping away with Baby Bunty. "Yesterday he played moving pictures with Jackie and Peetie Bow Wow, and now he's going ballooning with Baby Bunty. That rabbit will never grow up!" However, Uncle Wiggily was having a good time, so why should he worry, I ask you? It did not take him long to reach the toy store with Baby Bunty, and, pointing to some balloons in the window, Uncle Wiggily said:

"I'll take the red one for Baby Bunty."

"Oh, this is lovely!" exclaimed the little rabbit girl, "that's a five cent balloon and I have only a penny!"

"Never mind, my dear," laughed the rabbit uncle, "I'll pay the other four cents."

And he did, getting a fine, large balloon for Baby Bunty.

"Oh, this is lovely!" exclaimed the little rabbit girl, as she skipped along beside Mr. Longears through the wood. "I don't believe I could ever blow this balloon big enough to burst it!"

"Well don't try," advised Uncle Wiggily, twinkling his pink nose sort of sideways.

He and Baby Bunty had not gone very far through the woods before, all of a sudden, out popped the Skillery Scallery Alligator.

"Wuffle! Wuffle!" gurgled the Gator gratingly. "I'm in luck this day—two rabbits! Ah, ha."

"Oh, are you going to nibble our ears?" asked Baby Bunty, as she blew a little air into her balloon, making it about as large as an orange.

"Yes, I'm going to nibble ears," growled the Gator. But what have you there?" he asked. "Is it a red apple," for so it looked.

"It's my balloon," said Uncle Wiggily quickly. Would you like to see how large you can blow it Mr. Alligator, before you nibble our ears?"

"Yes, I'd like to blow the ballon," snarled the bad chap.

"Give it to him, Baby Bunty," advised Uncle Wiggily. "Go on, give it to him and let himb low it 'till it bursts, and it will scare him so he'll run away." Uncle [illegible] get away from here."

So Baby Bunty gave the Alligator her balloon, though she felt a little sad about it.

"Now blow as hard as you can, Mr. Gator," said Uncle Wiggily.

The Alligator blew. The balloon swelled to the size of a lemon. The 'Gator blew in more air and the balloon swelled up to the size of an orange. He blew in more air and the balloon swelled up like a watermelon.

"Go on!" cried Uncle Wiggily. "Make it as big as a wash tub!"

Well, the Alligator puffed out his cheeks. The ballon swelled up like a Monday morning wash tub and then—all at once it burst—the balloon did!

"Bang!" it went.

"Oh, I'm shot! I'm shot!" howled the 'Gator, and, falling over backward away he ran off through the woods, taking his tail with him.

"It's a good thing we bought that balloon!" chuckled the Bunny gentleman as he hopped to the store and got another for Baby Bunty.

"Yes," said the little rabbit girl, "it was a god thing."

Then she blew up her second balloon, but did not burst it.

And if the little hoptoad girl doesn't lose her hair ribbon when she's jumping rope with the roller skate I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily and Maggie's marbles.

TODAY'S SHORT STORY, BY

Ad Schuster

OLGA HANSSEN knows that among the happiest hours of her life were those of the studio which was kitchen and living room as well. She used to love to watch Nils Hanssen, her father, at work with the modeling clay or brush and, sometimes, she was flattered and pleased with the feeling that she was of help when he asked her to pose.

When Nils took his statue of "Innocense" to the exhibition Olga shared in the anxiety and suspense. When he returned, flushed with victory, to announce the work would be shown, she rejoiced as much as he.

"To think," said Olga, "I helped—for I did help, didn't I, Dad?"

No one else knew that Olga had been the model for the statue which attracted so much attention at the Exhibit, for Nils did not care to admit he had been without money to pay for a professional model, and Olga, looking at her semblance in stone, felt strangely embarrassed.

The sale of the statue, the flattering comments of the critics, and the prize of the Academy were too much for old Nils. He spent a month of ideal happiness, planned many greater accomplishments, then fell ill and died. Olga counted what left of the prize money and that which came for the statue and knew she must go out to work.

What was there for the daughter of an artist to do? Olga knew she could cook and sew, that she could [illegible] good literature. She would pose for no one else. After checking up her accomplishments she decided she would take a place as housemaid or cook, and study stenography at night.

* * * * * * * *

Fordham Young, bachelor and a poet, was the man who purchased the statue which had been the triumph of Nils Hanssen. He had it sent to his [illegible] protest from Miss Young, his elder sister, but where it stayed, nevertheless, in the place of honor in his study.

"Don't you see," said the poet, joking, "I have idolized women so much in verse and in my dreams that I owe it to [illegible] to measure up with the many requirements I have seemed to collect. Since I may not fall in love with a real woman, I will become acquainted with this one who comes nearest to the one I have visioned. Beside, she will not talk or play the piano when I am trying to write verse. She is beautiful, silent and, perhaps, appreciative. What more could one ask?"

Fordham Young learned to realize that the words he had spoken in jest were more than half true. As he wrote his verse he looked up at the graceful figure of the girl of stone. What he wrote and what he thought and tried to write became associated with the statue. Once, when he traveled into a beautiful country of lakes and hills, he found he was without inspiration and hastened back to his study.

"You are a great help," he said to the statue, "and I cannot live without you."

There must be material motive [illegible] with talks to a statue and calls it his inspiration. Fordham took his daily walks, answered his mail, delivered lectures, and even attended baseball games. While he was gone Miss Young saw to it the apartment was cleaned. She even had the maid dust the statue.

"For as much as my brother regards that image," she said with a practical scorn, "he would never think to associate it with a dust cloth or soap and water."

When the maid cleaned up Fordham's study and dusted the silent lady of his thought she took full time to the task. This statue pleased her as much as it did the poet. No one need tell her to take care of the greatest work of Nils Hanssen.

There came a time when Fordham Young rebeled at the hold exerted upon his thoughts by the statue of stone. He considered storing it away and knew that would be useless.

"I know what I'll do!" he said. "I'll look up the man who made it, find out who posed for it, and see if she is such a girl as the artist made of her."

The poet entered his study and stopped. The maid, the strange girl of whose presence in the house he had been vaguely aware, was dusting the statue and talking to it.

"It is too bad," she said, "you stand here all alone when the world should see you. And yet" —she thought of the poet—"it may be better so."

"You talk to the statue, too?" Fordham startled the girl who turned and, with the statue behind her, faced the artist. He was smiling.

"Don't go. You see I talk to it and I didn't know it had a spell for anyone else. To me [illegible] made. My sister says I am in love with it."

The poet spoke that the girl might remain. There was something familiar, remarkable, about this servant. And the statue behind her! Fordham Young stared in wonder. The girl's eyes were bright and there was a flush on her cheeks.

"I love the statue," she said, "for [illegible] to the kitchen.

Fordham Young scandalized his sister again by paying court to the housemaid. Olga still dusts the statue, but it is in her own home.

"It was you," says her husband, "[illegible] time in the statue, and who called to me." But that, perhaps, is poetic license.

A nail and pail bail made his tail,

MY FAVORITE STORIES by IRVIN S. COBB

Obscuring the Highway

There is a corner in a Southern state down near the Mississippi river, where formerly lynchings occurred more frequently than they do these times. In the days before the rural free delivery system was adopted, Uncle Gip Thomas held the contract for delivering the mail in this neighborhood. So regular was he that the residents almost could set their clocks by him.

But one day he was nearly two hours late in reaching the end of the line, where there was a tiny cross-roads hamlet. Just as the citizens were forming a posse to set out in search of him, in fear that some mishap had befallen him, Uncle Gip ambled into view.

"What delayed you, Uncle Gip?" asked the postmaster. "Did you happen to an accident or did an accident happen to you?"

"Nary one, or both," stated Uncle Gip. "But about 10 o'clock this mornin' jes' before I crossed the creek, I come to where some of the boys had done left a feller hangin' right thar in the public road. Well, suh, my mare she got skeered and shied back, and I jes' natchedly couldn't make her go past him noways; so finally I had to tear down a panel of rail fence and lead her through the gap and lay the fence back up again and go through the woods down into the hollow and ford the creek and then tear another gap in the fence before I could get back again on the turnpike and that was what kept me so late." Uncle Gip paused a moment and then went on again in an aggrieved tone:

"Honest, boys, it does look to me like there oughter be a law against leavin' a feller hangin' in the public road."

Uncle Reuben came to town to see his sister, Mary Ann. As they strolled about town taking in the sights, Uncle Reuben suddenly paused before one of the new skyscrapers and said to his sister: "Before we go any farther I should like to stop in here a minute and see a likely young nephew of mine, whose mother asked me to look him up." "Well," said Many Ann, "as I don't happen to have any nephews I will just trot on home and we will continue our sightseeing this afternoon."

Listen, World!

THERE'S an old Biblical expression which is a complete course in human human psychology. That expression is "the valley of vision." I was a very young girl when I first read it, and I thought it a strange blunder. "But visions do not come in valleys," said I to myself. "I know my visions won't come that way. They'll come when I'm on the mountain tops, when I'm glad and triumphant because I've passed all the obstacles." . . . I was very young. I didn't know. Then life took me in hand. And now the understand that old expression.

We seldom see our visions when we come to the mountain top. We are too much elated, too proud over the fact that we have won in the race and overcome the obstacles. We see ourselves, not those who toil beneath—the thing we have done, rather than the thing we might do.

Study the people who have "arrived." How seldom do they possess that sensitive understanding and practical sympathy which once made them lovable and helpful? They think they retain it. They think they are still filled with love and loveliness, dreams and ambition. But they are simply filled with satisfaction. Only the old gestures of brotherliness remain. They have reached their summit and the vision has passed.

But the people in the valleys—the humble and ignorant, the suffering and sinning people who walk in the shadowed places—for them the vision truly lives and flames along the horizon, though they may never reach its heart. They are the ones who know to the full the glory and fire of success—for they have failed. They are the ones who know the beauty of Righteousness—for, lacking it, they walk in darkness. They are the ones who know greatness of Love, for they grow sick without it. The Valley of your Vision—do you remember it, my Friend? That dark night when you laid hold of the hands you could not see—that bad hour when you were forced to make a new estimate of yourself, when you buried the old self and started anew? The winding, shadowed trail between the high, black walls of Sorrow and Despair—how empty of understanding are those who never walk that way!

Here's one wife's opinion of the May and December marriage. She says DON'T and she says it very emphatically.

Dearest Geraldine:

Replying to Puzzled Peg's question "What is your honest-to-goodness opinion of getting married to a man 25 years older than you are?" I can speak from experience, for I have tried it for 22 years and I got an early start too, beginning my bondage at 18.

My one and only reply honestly spoken is: Don't do it. Regardless of how much and sincerely in love you might be and how rosy everything looks for a happy future I say it is all wrong.

Geraldine, you say it is not a question of year age but of brain age: that is very true as far as it goes, but my experience has been that it is impossible for age and youth to agree, regardless of brain or intelligence, or how sincerely they may try to agree. It is a case of heartaches on the part of both parties.

Dorothy Dix said in a recent article something like this: that youth and age can no more have the same viewpoint, etc., than the flowers of May can bloom out of December snows. No one knows better than I do how true that is.

I could write volumes on the subject, but time does not permit nor would details perhaps be of particular interest.

It is rather a strange coincidence that I should be quite well acquainted with several couples where there is somewhat similar differences in age, and every one without exception will say as I do. Don't take the chance if you value your happiness and his, for it can't work out in that happy companionship, etc., so necessary to an agreeable home life.

I will add in closing that in my case there has always been plenty of money, so I never had to worry about where the cash was coming from to meet the bills.

Keep up your wonderful work Geraldine dear, you are surely a Godsend to this community.

DISILLUSIONED DAISY.

This space is an open forum—but it isn't a prize ring. I ardently wish that we might see all subjects discussed freely and frankly in this department, but whenever we attempt to do so, there's a riot. And invariably the ridest riots are those which concern religion. So I am always forced, to my regret, to put a stop to discussion, which should, if properly conducted, be beneficial to all. Such a discussion is the one which has recently arisen. It has already reached a point of bitter, personal recrimination and only our policy for fairplay makes me give "Brute" the chance for reply which he craves. I do not altogether agree with "Brute" nor with "W. S. P." but I do believe that each gentleman has a perfect right to his views and should be willing to grant the other chap an equal right and desist from calling names.

Each one of us must make his own definition of Christianity—and probably all our definitions would seem most amazing to the Christ whose name we use.

Dear Geraldine:

I believe I am entitled to be heard after the attack by W. S. P. and I assure you this will be my last on that subject as far be it from me to argue Religion—Life's all too short, and that is evidently W. S. P.'s intention.

Says Russell in "The Freeman," "But the armies which attack China from without, and the Missionaries and merchants who undermine Chinese Civilization from within, have no idea that there is anything of value to be preserved in a country which is bad at making ammunitions and a bit too provident in the use of soap." Just another misstatement in the opinion of W. S. P. Rather strange. Man of the Cloth—that if there was nothing in my statements to answer, and nothing worth noticing, that you who had knowledge on the subject would waste your time in an endeavor to refute it. First. The countries are few I haven't been through, and I have sailed every sea on the map. I therefore, have first hand knowledge, and knowing as I do, the ability of your kind to pick to pieces any statement made contrary to your creed and belief. Which, in the facts. I have no prejudice against Christianity. Certain kinds of religion—yes.

Your own words in your letter re Missionaries, were "The touch of Christian Missions opened the ports of China and Japan."

For proof of my statement, see Spear's "History of the U. S. Navy." I qualified my statement about the Missionaries never getting beyond the sound of cannon manned by civilized gunners. If you had read my statements with open mind—A Chinese dum-dum bullet would not have had much trouble in finding me, so I know how many Missionaries lost their lives in the Boxer uprising. What do you call a large number? Native converts, yes; they were traitors to their flesh and blood, and what civilized country don't shoot a traitor—Answer me that.

I have not, and will not refute or attempt to refute any of your statements as to the good that the Missionaries have done or do—that is part of their stock in trade. My wild tirade of statements, as you call them, were for the information of the "Gang," and as Geraldine very properly headed it, "Several matters interesting to all of us"—"What has "Brute" and others like him, done for humanity? Can't say for others like him, but as for "Brute," he never passes up a chance to drop a dime or so in the Salvation Army can, or pick up a poor devil out of the gutter. He helped to keep the likes of you from the trouble of learning to speak German, and living under the Iron Hand of a Civilized Christian Hun. He helped to remove the Spanish Civilized Iron Hand from the necks of the Cuban, not as a welfare-worker or a Sky Pilot—without disrespect to the welfare worker and Sky Pilot, they did mighty fine work.

As for my statements on the American Indians, it is all too well known for me to comment on further. Don't you think that Dr. Sheldon Jackson and Brother Brady, were rather well paid for their Alaska endeavors—I do. Kind of hard sledding at times, I admit, but how about the poor devils who moiled for the muck called gold? They liked it, so did Bros. Jackson and Brady.

I am not anti-Christian. I believe myself to be a true Christian, so far as practicing Christianity is concerned, but not with that Divine Right idea that I am right, and the rest of the world is wrong. My ignorant and hostile ranting has got me over the greatest part of God's green earth, and most of the water, and the part that hurts you and your kind, is, that I know the truth, and as Geraldine said, I speak without fear or favor—So ended the first lesson.

Now for a few of my misstatements that the Man of God failed to refute. Christianity takes Judaeism for granted, etc. Please turn to page 281, 9th line from the bottom of first column, Vol. 6, The Encyclopedia Britanica. Is it necessary to prove that our own fair cities need a little cleaning up? Did you, as I said, read any of Mr. Taft's speeches he made to our little Brown Brethren? (by the way that name was hung on them by the W. C. T. U. etc. in Washington Jake Smith, was ordered home—if my memory serves me rightly.)

Look up the meaning of the word Harem—It might interest as well as enlighten, and are there, or are there not, a few places other than the U. S. A., on this Hemisphere? Are the Jews Christians? You say the Mormons were not and can never be. Well if they don't either of them practice Christianity, then I for one, fail to see Christianity in its proper light. I have yet to meet a begging Jew or Mormon—that is, they don't bother us so-called Christians with their poverty—especially in this country.

Brother, in my parting (for this is my last, regardless of what you say), let me offer my hand as a Brother across this page, for further light and progress of Christianity in the broadest terms. I hold no animosity, neither against Religion nor a man of the Cloth, regardless of creed.

"Then hold in mind the truth that even those,
Who bear you down are also men and brothers
Reflecting while they tread upon your toes;
How sweet and kind, perhaps they are to others."
(Last verse of Rough Diamonds, by Author Guiterman.)

Yours,

Geraldine

Her Folks

We had been sparking—
Sue and I—
For—let me see—
It must have been all of three weeks—
Along the lanes where shady trees—
Harked to our simple-minded vows—
And whispered low among their kind—
But never told our secret—
Sue said one day—"Now that we know—
That fate intended us to be—
True mates for all eternity—
You'd better call and see my family"—
Now, I had been there once before—
But they all hid behind the door—
I heard a giggle now and then—
And I could hear some one say—shhh—
But that's as far as I had got—
So when Sue asked me out to dine—
I fixed up pretty—got a shine—
And had my hair slicked back with vaseline—
And smelling like a barber shop—
I made my way majestically—
Up to my vampire lady's door—
And timidly went rat-tat-tat—
They must have been on watch for me
For soon as I had struck a pose—
To make an impress good on those—Responsible for Susan—
The door swung wide and there in line—
Expectant and all smiling stood—
The tribe of old Van Dusen—
All girls and six of them with eyes—
That would have knocked the best of guys—
Quite silly—
Though Susan was a handsome filly—
Her sisters had her beat a mile—
And somehow in that bargain rush—
I felt that I was slipping—
Sue's father took me to one side—
And said Sue was a perfect dear—
She could have had an engineer—
Who made ten dollars every day—
But nay—she turned him down—
And any man would be quite dense—
Without a spoon of common sense—
Unless he grabbed her—grabbed her quick—
As barker for his Amazons—
Van Dusen had a nifty spiel—
But youth is shallow—fickle, too—
And Clarabell's two eyes of blue—
Quite won my heart—
And Winifred's angelic smile—
Roberta's wink—Winona's guile—
While Bessie had a cunning way—
All—all—their actions seem to say—
Don't be a jay—just take a hunch—
You've picked the slowest in the bunch—
Some years have passed since that glad night—
I wonder where they are tonight.

Eleanor awakens to find herself standing in Patton's room over his body, with a bent candlestick in her hand. Guests discover her in this attitude. Dr. Monroe pronounces Patton dead. Eleanor cannot explain her presence in his room.

A nurse testifies that she saw Eleanor sneaking into Patton's room.

CHAPTER 7
The Police

Silence followed the nurse's words.

Eleanor was too stunned to speak. The nurse had lied brazenly. Why?

If the servant's tale was true, it held the key to the whole amazing situation. It explained her presence in Patten's room. It made clear everything except the method of slaying and the motive. But it could not be true. She remembered how quickly she had gone to sleep—before she had been disrobed. Her last impressions had been of the blonde girl removing her shoes.

Hilda Beckman's sincerity had been so obvious as to startle her almost into believing this wild story herself. She had given an impression of fairness that was belied by her words. She had appeared loth to reveal the incriminating evidence even when pressed and then finally she had been forced, apparently, to admit seeing her enter Patton's room.

It was enough to shake the foundations of the girl's reason.

What motive could Hilda Beckman have for this slander? Eleanor had seen the girl but once or twice, and on those occasions the nurse had exhibited no venom. She could have no reason for the calumny.

Eleanor-May glanced at Dr. Munroe. Frank suspicion gleamed in the physician's eyes. Evidently he believed his office nurse.

Mrs. Cullen rose to her feet as soon as she had recovered from the blow and now faced the accuser of her daughter.

"What you say is incredible," she cried. "How can you stand there and lie about an innocent girl? You—you—" She choked with anger and emotion.

Eleanor arose also.

"It is not true," she asserted. "Mother, it is not true."

Colonel Dall, towering over them, nodded toward the nurse peremptorily.

"That will be all for you, Miss Beckman," he said. And as the nurse disappeared through the doorway—"This girl is innocent, Monroe. We must protect her. Do you understand?"

"No, I do not understand," snapped the physician. "The young lady is in an embarrassing position. I sympathize with her. But certainly we cannot shield her from the authorities."

"The police need not be notified at once," said Dall, positively.

"You forget that this scandal is public property," countered Dr. Monroe testily. "Remember that all your guests saw the spectacle. Of course they will not hold their tongue. Tomorrow the world will know about it. If I tried to conceal this crime, I would become criminally liable myself. No, Curt, it cannot be done."

Eleanor turned to Dall, frightened. Curiously enough she had not dwelt upon the legal phase of the matter. There would be an investigation. The guests would tell of seeing her standing there in the room over Patton's body with the candlestick in her hand. Hilda Beckman would relate the tale she had just told.

A chill shook the girl. The police would take her to jail. She could imagine the newspaper accounts that would be published. Her part in the tragedy could not be concealed. The brand was upon her.

Mrs. Cullen, who had been pacing up and down the room, throwing back her head and pressing her clenched fists into her eyes, now advanced on the Doctor.

"Please do not call the police just yet," she requested. "It will mean ruin to us—to myself, to Eleanor. She is not guilty. You know that. Grant us time to get at the truth."

"I have the truth," returned Dr. Monroe, coldly. "With my own eyes I saw this young lady, attired in a night dress, in Patton's room. I saw her throw a weapon aside as we entered. Her bed had not been occupied during the night. The nurse's testimony clenches the evidence. There is no need to reiterate what my conclusions must be."

The gray haired woman appealed to Dall.

"Curt, prevent him from calling the police," she pleaded. "We must have more time. The truth has not been told. Eleanor had no motive? What incentive could she
Dr. Monroe snorted.

"Motive enough," he replied. "Perhaps you are aware that Miss Cullen had a serious quarrel with Patton last evening. It seems he was about to reveal a secret of hers?"

Eleanor May gasped. The case against her was becoming more and more damning.

"My secret was nothing at all," she protested. "Everyone will learn it now. I am the girl whom the newspapers call the 'Black Angel.' I wanted to work quietly among the poor, so I kept my identity secret. Patton discovered it. That was the terrible secret he was going to disclose."

Mrs. Cullen paid no attention to her daughter's words. She approached Dr. Munroe and made a final personal appeal.

"Your professional honor de-
" she began.

"Professional ethics demand that I place no stone in the path of justice," the doctor interrupted, a bit sharply. "I have no intention of calling in the police, however."

Eleanor heard her mother give a great sigh of relief and saw her drop into a chair and bury her head in her hands. She, herself, was too to adjust her mind to the situation to experience any sensation. Mrs. Cullen's joy was short lived.

"There will be no need for me to do that," continued Monroe. "The spreading news will bring down the authorities quickly enough."

Dall stepped between the physician and the women.

"No more of this," he decreed. "I will handle the matter in my own way."

Without a word Dr. Monroe walked out of the room and slammed the door after him.

Absently Eleanor May began to gather up her things and place them in her steamer trunk. Why she was packing, she did not know. Some subconscious voice told her that she would be moving before long.

Her mother rocked back and forth disconsolately in a chair. Curtiss Dall came quite close to her. He spoke softly, encouragingly.

"I am going to get you out of this," she heard him say. "Time will clear it up. In the meantime you must go where you will not be harassed. When you have collected your wits and can bring out the ele. I have a taxi waiting——"

He was speaking in an undertone, so that her mother would not hear.

Eleanor felt her volition vanishing before his insistence. Yet she had the strength to object feebly.

"I do not want to run away," she said, in a dull hopeless voice. "I shall stay. I am innocent. I must remain and prove it."

"You forget that this scandal is public property," countered Dr. Monroe testily. "Remember that all your guests saw the spectacle. Of course they will not hold their tongue. Tomorrow the world will know about it. If I tried to conceal this crime, I would become criminally liable myself. No, Curt, it cannot be done."

Eleanor turned to Dall, frightened. Curiously enough she had not dwelt upon the legal phase of the matter. There would be an investigation. The guests would tell of seeing her standing there in the room over Patton's body with the candlestick in her hand. Hilda Beckman would relate the tale she had just told.

A chill shook the girl. The police would take her to jail. She could imagine the newspaper accounts that would be published. Her part in the tragedy could not be concealed. The brand was upon her.

Mrs. Cullen, who had been pacing up and down the room, throwing back her head and pressing her clenched fists into her eyes, now advanced on the Doctor.

"Please do not call the police just yet," she requested. "It will mean ruin to us—to myself, to Eleanor. She is not guilty. You know that. Grant us time to get at the truth."

"I have the truth," returned Dr. Monroe, coldly. "With my own eyes I saw this young lady, attired in a night dress, in Patton's room. I saw her throw a weapon aside as we entered. Her bed had not been occupied during the night. The nurse's testimony clenches the evidence. There is no need to reiterate what my conclusions must be."

The gray haired woman appealed to Dall.

"Curt, prevent him from calling the police," she pleaded. "We must have more time. The truth has not been told. Eleanor had no motive? What incentive could she
Dr. Monroe snorted.

"Motive enough," he replied. "Perhaps you are aware that Miss Cullen had a serious quarrel with Patton last evening. It seems he was about to reveal a secret of hers?"

Eleanor May gasped. The case against her was becoming more and more damning.

"My secret was nothing at all," she protested. "Everyone will learn it now. I am the girl whom the newspapers call the 'Black Angel.' I wanted to work quietly among the poor, so I kept my identity secret. Patton discovered it. That was the terrible secret he was going to disclose."

Mrs. Cullen paid no attention to her daughter's words. She approached Dr. Munroe and made a final personal appeal.

"Your professional honor de-
" she began.

"Professional ethics demand that I place no stone in the path of justice," the doctor interrupted, a bit sharply. "I have no intention of calling in the police, however."

Eleanor heard her mother give a great sigh of relief and saw her drop into a chair and bury her head in her hands. She, herself, was too to adjust her mind to the situation to experience any sensation. Mrs. Cullen's joy was short lived.

"There will be no need for me to do that," continued Monroe. "The spreading news will bring down the authorities quickly enough."

Dall stepped between the physician and the women.

"No more of this," he decreed. "I will handle the matter in my own way."

Without a word Dr. Monroe walked out of the room and slammed the door after him.

Absently Eleanor May began to gather up her things and place them in her steamer trunk. Why she was packing, she did not know. Some subconscious voice told her that she would be moving before long.

Her mother rocked back and forth disconsolately in a chair. Curtiss Dall came quite close to her. He spoke softly, encouragingly.

"I am going to get you out of this," she heard him say. "Time will clear it up. In the meantime you must go where you will not be harassed. When you have collected your wits and can bring out the Eleanor felt her volition vanishing before his insistence. Yet she had the strength to object feebly.

"I do not want to run away," she said, in a dull hopeless voice. "I shall stay. I am innocent. I must remain and prove it."

She rose with nervous determination, confronting Dr. Monroe.

"I will talk to him," she said, decisively. "I will see this officer. Take me down, doctor."

When they had departed Dall faced the girl. He pointed to the door, beyond which lay freedom.

"Through there," he said, briefly. "Down past the hothouses. A taxicab will await you."

"But what will become of me?" she asked. "I have no place to go. I have no money. I cannot go to a hotel alone."

"You must board the Typhoon," he asserted. "Take the taxicab to Government wharf. Dismiss it. Wait until the driver is out of sight. Walk up the waterfront two blocks. A boat will wait for you to take you to the yacht. Put on Patton's overcoat and cap. That will conceal your woman's dress sufficiently in the night.

He possessed himself of her hand and kissed the limp fingers.

"They must not know I engineered this," he concluded. "They could trace you then and arrest me. I am going now. You must not be here when I return with the

He pointed a warning finger at her as he stood with his hand on the doorknob.

"If you remain," he warned, ominously, "you will be arrested for them under of Gerald Patton."

The Domestic Service Problem

Dorothy Dix

Deplores Lack of Pride in Work

It's the Same in Domestic Science as in Business—The Relation Between the Worker and Her Boss Is Financial, Not Social

A MIDDLE-AGED woman, forced by the death of her husband to earn her own living, has wisely turned to the only thing she knew how to do, cooking and housework. So far she has had three places in which the wages and the living conditions were perfectly satisfactory, and in which she was treated kindly and courteously by her employers. But she complains bitterly because she was not made one of the family. In one place she had her meals with the family, but when they went out in their automobile they didn't take her along with them. In another place she was not asked to sit with the family of an evening, and in the third she felt herself mortally insulted because some guest treated her coolly when leaving.

Therefore, she packed her grip and left each situation and says that women who do domestic work are looked down upon, and that she does not wonder that girls would rather starve in a sweatshop than feast in the kitchen.

IT SEEMS to me that this woman takes a very narrow and one-sided view of the situation. She forgets that the relationship between the employer and the employed is financial, and not social. If she were the private secretary of a banker she wouldn't expect to ride around in his limousine. If she were a clerk in a big department store, she wouldn't expect to spend her evenings in the bosom of the proprietor's family. If she were a writer, or an actress, or a doctor's assistant, she wouldn't expect her employer's guests to fall on her neck at their departure.

NONE of these women consider themselves slighted or looked down upon because they are never invited to their employer's houses, and are not introduced to their employer's family and friends, nor made one of the circle of their employer's intimates. Their business is to do a certain amount of work for a certain amount of pay. Their right is to be treated justly and civilly, and these obligations having been fulfilled by both parties the matter is ended, and the contract between the party of the first part and the party of the second part automatically ceases.

The employer is under no obligations to supply the employee with social diversion, and, as a matter of fact, the employee is generally no more anxious to continue the association outside of the shop than the employer is. Many a woman who takes a man's dictation and stands behind his counters is far bitter bred and better educated than he is, and she has no desire to know him o his friends in a social way.

IT IS only the woman in domestic service who resents this separation of the business life from the social life, who demands an intimate relationship with those for whom she works, and, curiously enough, she is the only employee who ever attains [illegible] position. For a woman may work in an office or store for thirty or forty years, and give an absolutely faithful and devoted service, and get no more personal feeling than respect and gratitude. But the old housekeeper, the old nurse, the old cook who has been with a family through birth, and death, and sickness, and sorrow, and weddings, and merrymakings, does become a part of it, and is held in almost as much affection as mother or grandmother themselves.

THE domestic employee who resents not being made a member of the family circle should remember that every household [illegible] room, into which a stranger has nothing to do, and which it is neither well nor wise to tell to an outsider. It is not pride but prudence that keeps Mr. Jones from discussing with Mrs. Jones before others how he shall meet the note that is coming due next week, or that keeps them from talking about the trouble that John has got into at college, or wondering whether Mary's latest beau means business or is one of the many who have jazzed and ridden away.

And surely any woman, who wouldn't like to tell any of her private affairs to a chance acquaintance who might blab them all over the neighborhood, should have enough sense to realize this, and should not have her feelings hurt when she isn't asked to sit in at the domestic powwows.

WOMEN who are willing to do twice the work in factories and sweatshops for half the money that they could get in kitchens complain that domestic service is looked down upon. If this is true, it is because domestic labor is habitually the worst done work in the world. It is work that is done without pride of craftsmanship, without ambition, without desire for efficiency, without even the common honesty that makes the worker want to give good work for fair pay.

HERE and there are exceptions to this rule, but they are as scarce as hens' teeth, and when you do find a domestic worker who is competent and anxious to please, she does not need to complain about her position in a family. She is the queen of the household, and every one is down on bended knee trying to make things pleasant for her so that she will not leave.

The dignity of any calling rests with the people who follow it, and the intelligence, the fineness and the skill that they put into their work. Those who follow what we call the learned professions, college professors, doctors, lawyers, were once looked down upon by lordly knights and men-at-arms as mere scriveners. Artists and writers were despised, and only lived by being flunkies to some great man. It has only been two or three generations since actors were regarded as outcasts of society.

SO IT is up to the domestic workers to raise their profession to the plane of a fine art.

In the meantime, they need not worry about anybody looking down on a good cook. We all look up to her with awe and admiration and envy.

THE QUEER LITTLE OLD WOMAN BEFORE LONG HAD LEFT THEM FAR BEHIND.

"IT was fortunate that Grampy Hoppytoad happened along when he did," the Too ack quee said to Betsy Bonnet String and the Raggedys as they rode through the woods on their magic bicycles toward the Too ack quee's home. "For if Grampy Hoppytoad had not come along and asked Bertram Bumble Bee to help us we would never have been able to get Betsy Bonnet String's magic apron from the queer little old woman in the tree."

"I am very grateful to Grampy Hoppytoad and Bertram Bumble Bee," Betsy Bonnet String said. "Let us try and think of some nice present that I can shake from my magic apron for Grampy Hoppy-
"All right," Raggedy Ann said. "Let us all remain real quiet for in that way we can all think better, and maybe by the time we reach the Too ack quee's home we will think of a lot of nice things. Then we can choose the two best ones and give them to Grampy Hoppytoad and Bertram Bumble Bee."

So, Betsy Bonnet String and the Too ack quee and the Raggedys all rode side by side, "lickety split," through the woods toward the Too ack quee's home.

With the magic bicycles the Raggedys and their friends rode, they did not have to work any pedals. The magic bicycles just ran along all by themselves and all they had to do was guide them. That was one reason they could ride so fast. And that was the reason why when they turned a bend in the path, they all rode their bicycles "slap-dash" into a long lane across the path. They were going so fast, they didn't have time to stop until all the bicycles hit the log and the Raggedys and Betsy Bonnet String and the Too ack quee went flying head over heels into the grass.

Then, before any of them could get to their feet, the queer little old woman hopped out from behind a tree and snatched the magic apron from Betsy Bonnet String again.

"She has taken my magic apron again," Betsy Bonnet String cried as she ran after the queer little old woman.

"Catch her," the Too ack quee cried as he ran after Betsy Bonnet String.

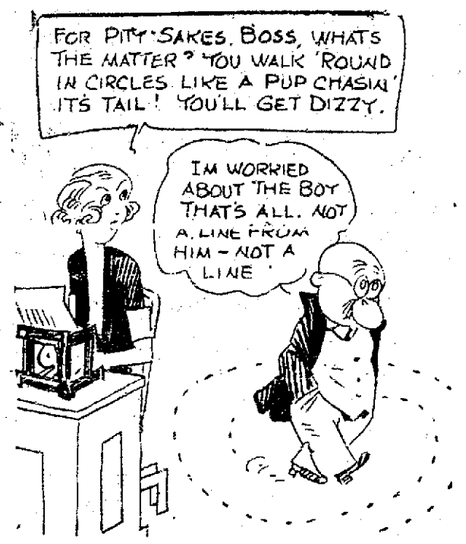

"Hold her," Raggedy Ann and Raggedy Andy cried as they followed the Too ack quee. But although they could run very fast, the queer little old woman could run faster, and before long, she had left them far behind.

"Well," said Raggedy Ann as she came up to Betsy Bonnet String and the Too ack quee, "Let us get our magic bicycles and circle through the woods and head her off." So they all ran back and got upon their magic bicycles. Then you should have seen the magic bicycles go "Splicity-lickity," until they had circled around through the woods and were waiting at the tree when the queer little woman came running up.

"Ha, Now you give us Betsy Bonnet String's magic apron," the Too ack quee cried as he jumped out from behind the tree and took the apron away from the old woman. The queer little old woman was so surprised to see the Too ack quee and his friends waiting there for her, she could not say a word. All she did was hop into the tree and close it up behind her with a bang. "Now we can ride home in safety," the Too ack quee said as he gave Betsy the magic apron. "For the little us this time." And indeed they did get to the Too ack quee's home in safety, and just in time, for dinner, too.

MELROSE SPEEDS GROWTH WHERE HORSES ONCE RAN

Old-Time Racing Gives Way to Rush of Business District.

By FRANCES MONTGOMERY.

Melrose has one resident at least, in the person of Charles Harris living at Twelfth and High streets, who remembers when the entire community used to gather on the main street with its one and only business building and bet good money on the horses, for East Fourteenth street in Melrose at that time provided the most popular race track in the country. That was some 25 or 30 years ago and, although they do not now use horses, the business men of the main street of Melrose are going on racing just the same to see which one can lead in advancing the interests of their community.

Wednesday morning while the General Electric company was surveying at 14th and 55th avenue for a new unit on its recently purchased 29 acres, a large number of real estate men gathered at the Melrose W. O. W. hall and put the final touches on a brand new organization which will be a branch of the Oakland board. They are going to do things in those parts and the group includes members from Elmhurst, Fruitvale, Allendale and Melrose. J. H. Shealy is the president and Charles Ruedy is the secretary of the new branch and beside making East 14th street a great white way they say they are going to boost a car line right on to 73rd street. They will hold joint meetings every Tuesday at a luncheon held in their home sections consecutively and have the endorsement of the down town association.

Melrose is to have a Masonic lodge. Although the members have been holding meetings for the past five months they are expecting their charter to be granted some time this month and when the new lodge is all ship shape and the several Masons receive their demits they will be known as the Foothill Lodge.

Ever since that rainy day when the S. P. entered Melrose and laid, incognito, as it were, the tracks across East Fourteenth street, the Melrosans have been getting busy and have made tracks ever since. Tracks toward progress and success. The tearing jaws of a steam shovel are preparing the foundation of a $75,000 bank building on East Fourteenth street, while attractive homes are going up wholesale out at Maxwell park. There are four solid blocks of them and they are being erected simultaneously, all arriving at completion at the same time. Bungalows are springing up like mushrooms in this section and it is stated that Los Angeles builders soon will add the Maxwell section two more blocks of homes to be built on the same plan of construction.

Melrose has a newspaper all its own. It is the Advance, and its headlines admit that it is devoted to the residents east of Lake Merritt. The Advance announces the forming of an athletic club as well as a social club. The town expects to have a real baseball team of its own. A bazaar and fair is to be held at the St. Elizabeth church April 24-28 inclusively, and Oakland merchants are donating merchandise for this fair.

The C. W. Gibson memorial gift of 3914 volumes to the Melrose branch of the free library is proving invaluable not only to the people of the immediate community but to students of Mills college and the University of California who frequently refer to them. The books which pertain to history, science, religion, sociology, biography, travel and fiction made up the private library of the son of C. W. Gibson and were presented to the library as a memorial to him. With the gift was a fund of $1000 investment for the replacing and upkeep of the volumes. Melrose is proud of the service this extraordinary collection of books affords and is unceasingly grateful to the donors.

Melrose is not without its gossip and rumor says that the school board is about to purchase ground near the Melrose school with a view to changing the school grounds. And speaking of schools, Fremont High school at Melrose excels in its department of fine arts. Nowhere on this coast may a student obtain more thorough training in the rudiments of art and design. Under the supervision of William S. Rice, himself a California artist of note, the students of Fremont High are putting forth work which is quite professional. [illegible] seem to be most popular courses, and an Easter design contest in the pen and ink classes resulted in some most artistic efforts. A simple Easter lily design against a background of black with Gothic arch in silver line won the contest and is the work of Clara Medina. Under Miss Eby the art students learn applied design and most beautiful effects are obtained with colored chalks, watercolor and pastel.

There are classes in tied dying and batique and the artists are busy on the nursery frieze for Lazear day nursery which they are outfitting. In this department Katherine Clough, a student, has on exhibition some unished articles and garments in stitchery showing the application of color theory which resemble in effect and workmanship, antique Persian embroidery. William S. Rice has been the art director in Fremont high since 1909, and has created an are atmosphere unusual outside an [illegible] school and which is constantly bearing results.

Ever since Melrose went from county control and was annexed to Oakland on November 16, 1919, the Melrose merchants have prided themselves on their ability to produce the best for less so now they have awarded H. P. Sheridan a fifteen dollar electric percolator for their newly adopted slogan which means what it says: "That the

CHINESE RADIO RIGHTS MAY GO TO ARBITRATION

WASHINGTON, April 21.—State department officials said today there had been no recent developments here with regard to efforts of the Federal Wireless company to establish stations in China, and it was added that no official information had been received from Minister Schurman at Peking as to what was transpiring there.

Interest was shown in press despatches to the effect that the Chinese government was resorting to dilatory tactics which served to block the carrying out of the American company's project.

The state department all along has taken the position that it should support the Federal Wireless company in its effort to get justice. The matter has been placed in the hands of Minister Schurman, who, informed as he is as to the policy of his government, has been given a free rein.

It appeared probable that in the event the Federal company with the assistance of Mr. Schurman and members of his staff, is not able to effect an equitable adjustment, the American government might propose that the question of radio rights of foreign companies in China be referred to some sort of an arbitration commission for adjustment.

Such a step has been suggested by various state department officials in informal discussions of the situation confronting the Federal company and American concessionaires in various countries where the United States has insisted that the open door policy prevail.

Speeding Sends Pretty Tourist To Prison Cell

ALBANY, April 21.—The old adage that "he who laughs last laughs best" might be applied today to the case of Miss Dorothea Jensen, attractive young "tourist."

After evading Albany officers who arrested her for speeding Wednesday morning, Miss Jensen is today a "guest" at the county jail in Oakland. She was sentenced last night to serve two days in jail as a result of driving her car at the rate of 42 miles per hour.

When arrested, Miss Jensen gave her address as a hotel in Oakland. No trace of her could be found at the hotel named, when a bench warrant was issued by Judge John H. Paul of Albany, after her failure to appear in court to answer a charge of speeding. She was later traced to 402 Twenty-ninth avenue, where she was visiting.

At the time of her arrest, she declared: "I'm a speed demon. I seldom travel under 60 miles an hour." She slipped a card summoning her to court down her stocking, lighted a cigarette and, with a cheery good-bye, was on her way to Oakland.

In court last night, Miss Jensen admitted her guilt and, following a custom with persons travelling over 40 miles an hour, Judge Paul sentenced her to a jail term. She began her sentence last night and will be released tonight at midnight.

TRIO CHARGED WITH LUMBER THEFT, FREED

ALBANY, April 21.—Because of insufficient evidence, Mr. and Mrs. O. G. Johaneson and Edward Wolf, 1305 Ward street, Berkeley, are free today of petty larceny charges. The three were taken into custody in Albany Thursday night by Officer Frank Davis, who declares he caught them stealing shingles from a house under construction at Pomona street and Portland avenue. Before he could place them under arrest Davis declares that shingles which the men had taken were thrown back into the house. At Berkeley police station where the trio were taken all refused to talk when placed on the "lie detector."

As a result of the arrest of the trio, Clarence Perry, boilermaker, also residing at the Ward street address, is serving six months in the county jail for bootlegging. He was arrested when officers went to search the place. The complaints against the Johanesons and Wolf were dismissed today by Judge John H. Paul on the recommendation of the complaining officer.

Vlahos's building will be the fourth apartment house to be begun in San Leandro since the first of this year.

The body was found in a gas-filled room which had been locked on the inside. All the doors to the house had also been locked.

SQUILLACI FREE, WELCOMED HOME BY OLD FRIENDS

Slayer of His Daughters' Traducer Found Not Guilty by Jury.

Cleared of the charge of murder, George Squillaci is at liberty today. For the first time in four months, he spent the night at the family home on Seventh street, following his acquittal last night by a jury in Superior Judge Church's court. All evening open house was held and friends and neighbors called to felicitate him and his family on his victory in court.

Squillaci was charged with the murder of John Marrapo, which took place January 16 at 333 Myrtle street, the home of Mrs. Mary Santople, his daughter.

The verdict was received after 5 o'clock last night before a crowded courtroom. There was no demonstration when the verdict was announced, but Squillaci's wife and four daughters were with him when the verdict was received. As soon as court adjourned, they crowded around their father, tears and smiles mingling.

DEFENDANT THANKS JURORS.

Squillaci and his family thanked each juror and the attorneys for the defense, Phil Carey and Henry Canriel, the latter of San Jose, came in for their share of thanks.

The trouble which ended in the death of Marrapo, a brother of Mrs. Squillaci, began twelve years ago in San Jose, when Marrapo confessed illicit relations with Mary Squillaci. Consent to their marriage was given only to be followed by a criminal complaint against Marrapo. He was sentenced to prison for three years. In the meantime a child was born to Mary.

Upon his release from prison, Marrapo is alleged to have abducted Teresa Squillaci, Mary's younger sister. Mary secured a divorce from him and he married Teresa. Before this, however, he is alleged to have attacked Minnie Squillaci, then 12 years of age.

At the behest of friends, Squillaci left San Jose, coming to Oakland to make his home with his family. For ten years he saw neither Marrapo nor his daughter, Teresa, as they were living in Hanford. Mary, in the meantime, married again.

SLAIN AS AN INTRUDER.

On January 16, Marrapo came to Oakland with his nephew. He learned of Mary's address and went to her home. Failing to find her in, he left word that he would return. Mary went to the home of her father and told him of the visit.

Squillaci went to Mary's home armed with a shotgun. When Marrapo arrived, Mary's husband, Frank Santople, was with him. He protested against Marrapo's entering his home, but the latter attempted to force his way in. Squillaci, who was standing inside the door, fired through a broken pane of glass in the doorway, killing Marrapo instantly.

Man Held as Fence For Auto Theft Ring

John T. Linn, who runs an auto wrecking business at 1151 East Twelfth street, and Harry J. Weidner are held today by the Berkeley police.

The arrest of Linn was brought about through confessions obtained from Weidner who was brought to Berkeley from Martinez when the Contra Costa authorities failed to obtain evidence against him.

Weidner confessed to the Berkeley police, they say, that he had stripped automobiles of accessories in Martinez, Antioch, Concord, Lafayette on the Tunnel road and other points, selling the loot to Linn. One of Weidner's victims was William Keith, Contra Costa county traffic office, who had his motorcycle stolen, according to the reported confession.

Linn will be turned over to the Oakland police for investigation while Weidner, in view of his alleged confession, will be returned to the Contra Costa county authorities.

OLIPHANT FILES NEW COMPLAINT ASKING RECOUNT

Through the eleventh hour filing of an amended complaint in the county clerk's office David Oliphant may secure a Superior Court recount of the votes cast for the office of mayor at the last election.

This morning it was discovered that the original complaint was illegal in that it did not comply with all of the requirements of the law in regard to the three notices which the contestant is required to file.

These notices must be exact copies of the original complaint as filed, and Deputy County Clerk W. E. Adams learned, on investigation, that the name of the contestant had been omitted from all three copies.

Shortly before noon Oliphant filed an amended complaint and the next step will be a recount, if the Superior Court decides that the claims of the candidate are justifiable under law.

Oliphant charges in his affidavit that the name of Mayor Davie was read from certain ballots by election officials during their tally when the ballots in question were cast for the contestant. This error occurred more than 400 times, he sets forth.

It is further alleged by Oliphant that there were more than 200 votes written in for other persons than those candidates whose names appeared in printed form on the ballot. These written names the election officials refused and failed to count, it is charged. "This number alone would be sufficient to offset the alleged majority of the contestee, John L. Davie," says the affidavit and complaint.

That Dr. David Meyers received fully 200 votes that were not tallied in his favor by the election officials at the polls is another charge of Oliphant, who sets forth that the officials, believing that Meyers received a very small total and therefore did not figure in the election refused to continue counting the votes cast for him.

Oliphant alleges that the arrangement of the ballots resulted in the loss of many votes for him. He sets forth that when folded, after having been stamped, the ballots were so arranged that the freshly stamped cross would leave a blot opposite the name of another candidate for mayor. In many precincts these were thrown out entirely, says Oliphant, while in others they were counted for Davie while in reality the cross had originally been stamped opposite the name of Oliphant and the mark found opposite the name of Davie, and counted for him, was in reality only a blot. It is alleged that more than 400 errors of this kind occurred.

The affidavits sets forth the additional charge that in many precincts more votes were tallied and reported for the office of mayor than were actually cast, and that, in each of these instances, the surplus was given to Davie.

The final contention is that Oliphant lost numerous votes which were thrown out by the election officials because the voter used pencil to mark the ballot instead of the rubber stamp provided. The contestant claims that the ballots, so marked, were legal and should have been counted for him.

Meanwhile City Attorney Leon Gray, who scouts as "highly improbable" a decision in the courts adverse to Mayor Davie, has ruled that the new municipal election ballot, to be printed for the May 8 final elections, will not contain the names of the candidates for mayor nor will any vote for mayor be recognized.

The city also refused the request that the ballots of the recent election be sent to county vaults, holding that they will be kept in the vaults of the city clerk's office until requested by the Superior Court.

SAN JOSE, April 21.—Dodging blue-coated police, passing half-shocked women who did not know whether to faint or to laugh, bearing the hoots of small boys and all the while fighting bravely to keep his skirts from flying, Al Trivelpiece, popular College of the Pacific student, clad in his nightie, a hay hat, a pair of sox and felt slippers, made his way through the business district of the city en route back to the college campus yesterday. All this because of a wager. It seems that a fellow student named Joe Eastwood bet Trivelpiece $5 that the latter would not walk around the college grounds once in his nightgown. Trivelpiece accepted the terms of the wager and was started out.

As he left East Hall at the college he was set upon by a dozen other students, who seized him, carried him to a waiting automobile, hauled him to the center of the city, and dumped him out near First and Santa Clara streets, just before 5 o'clock, when the streets were crowded with hurrying shoppers.

Trivelpiece, who had no money and who did not dare to go close enough to anyone to ask a 6-cent car fare loan for fear of being pounced upon as a maniac, walked back to the college, slipping from doorway to doorway and from post to post, ever dodging the police. Trivelpiece said that he never knew San Jose had so many policemen until yesterday afternoon.

Lost! A Ship's Propeller

"Gosh! I Wondered What Was the Matter," Says Pilot Jack Webster---When He Landed He Looked About and Found His Propeller Had Dropped From the Ship

By Jack Bell

PILOT JACK WEBSTER, who has made flights over the Hump on ferrying trips, met with an accident a few months ago that was new and unheard-of in aeronautics. Taking out his regular run on the Omaha-North Platte division, he nosed his ship up into the heavens with that skill of which he is famous. He had just levelled it off and the personnel on the field were watching the master hand at work. A cry from one of the staff called to the attention of every watcher that Webster was in serious trouble.

The ship was on a level keel, the roar of the great Liberty had ceased its growling, and there could be seen a flashing, hurtling something falling under the ship's wake with the speed of lightning. There was no way to hazard a guess as to what had happened to the ship.

Then with nerve and initiative, the same as is possessed by nine out of ten of the air mail pilots, the great silver bird banked and straightway started gliding towards the home hangar.

Webster made a perfect landing. He hopped from the ship, and was using flying language. At first nothing was noticed that indicated the cause of the anger of the pilot. Then all at once the entire personnel gaped and stuttered their amazement—the propeller was missing.

There is no other record in the Air Mail of this unusual happening.

"I had just levelled her off," said Webster, "and was getting ready to take life easy, as it was a perfect flying day, when, bang, and the Liberty ran wild far and above the maximum speed. Whew! but she did go a hellin'. I cut the switches, dumfounded at the rare action. I looked over the windshield, and Gosh! I had no prop.

"Say! believe me, I got busy in a hurry. I had plenty of altitude and knew I had a mighty good [illegible] on the field if nothing else happened.

"My first thought was that some accident might happen when that streak of propeller struck the ground, but thank goodness, nothing happened. I don't know where it landed, and it must be buried too deep somewhere in the prairie along the Platt river, and believe me, a 75 pound compact piece of laminated propeller would make some gash upon the earth when she was hurled from the ship under a velocity of 1550 revolutions."

The invisible line that stretches between death and disaster and a safe passage through the sky is very often drawn taut, with a tightness that snaps many of the silk strands; many times the few strands are frayed and some broken, leaving but that tiny fine hair that holds the thread together and spells safety to the battlers against the elements, far up in the sky above the earth.

Pilot Eaton came in from the Elko run in early February after a long, hard fight against wind and a near disaster of which he knew nothing. When he stepped from the ship he reported to Chief Mechanic Frank Caldwell that there was something radically wrong with the radiator. The water had spat back in a spume of drizzle and gush. Back over the high mountains to the east it happened. An accident was not anticipated.

The eight-foot propeller is bolted into the shaft with eight bolts, with lock nuts, of course. When Caldwell went to the front of the ship to look over what damage might have happened he was amazed and dumfounded to note that the great blade was so slivered that it resembled a whisk broom.

It was being held by two lonely, loose nuts. The radiator shutters were demolished and the radiator cowling smashed to smithereens. It was easily determined that the nuts from the head had dropped into the propeller blade and with the terrific force of 1550 revolutions per minute had caused the damage. It was the first time that a circumstance of this sort has ever been made of record on the Reno field.

This is but a hint of what may happen to these flying men almost any trip. There is no way—not even with the zealous care that ships are inspected—that can provide against accidents of this character.

Pilot Burr Winslow, taking off the Reno field the trip before his classic light above Verdi on January 27, 1923, snapped one of the longeron wires after he had been in the air but a few minutes. The slight jar of deviation from the perfect stream lines he felt, and immediately turned his ship and headed for the Reno field, where [illegible] wires are the guy standards that help hold the nest wherein the great Liberty motor rests. An accident of this sort throws the ship out of flying balance, and of course there is danger of a serious mishap.

Pilot William F. Blanchfield, formerly of the Hump run, has had many harrowing experiences. It would seem that old grim bad luck had been on his trail, and his narrow escapes from a 'washout' have been many. However, Blanchfield always has come up smiling with his fetching grin and a shrug of his broad shoulders, talking away when queried too closely about some one particularly close shave he has just passed through.

It is already history on the Reno-Elko run that the ships Blanchfield flew in the beginning of his service here were bad luck boats—every single one of them. It appeared that every ship he flew had some sickness—some were badly diseased. The old crates had been used by the army and some of them slapped together in any old way on rebuild. Blanchfield drew these air ox-carts.

He has had a narrow escape from being burned alive, caused by leaks, his body oil-spattered, as was the entire ship, from a burst oil line. His ships have suffered cracked water jackets and parted control wires.

"There is a time in every man's life when he will be called," says Bill Blanchfield. "With due diligence and care, and not taking any foolish chances, an air man will go to his finals when he is called—not before—Fatalist? Yes, of course. The flying game under the present perfect dovetailing system of crack Motor Macks and crews at terminals makes the game of Air Mail flying comparatively safe, as far as straight flying goes. Jazzing the big mail ships is indeed a dangerous and foolhardy occupation—and there is very little of this stuff pulled any more.

"The barn-storming stuff is all off. Now we are all of one mind in Air Mail, and that is to keep the records of the service up to 100 per cent.

"There are enough thrills in straight flying over the Elko-Reno and Reno-San Francisco runs to keep a man fed up on 'getting a kick' out of the game. Take recently, I had to go under a storm and fly Palisade canyon just above the telegraph wires and sometimes almost down to the rails of the railroad right of way.

"That day will always be remembered by me as filled brimful with action. It is true that my wings were not over a foot from the spiked rocky walls time and again. The wings brushed small growth trees, and to negotiate the passage of that narrow canyon required every bit of skill I possessed. It was a matter of fractional calcu[illegible] nose her a bit here, putting her up there, and just zig-zag in the quickest space of minutes."

The warm weather has softened the Reno landing field so that it is like a swamp. The ruts are deep, and slimy with 'dobe.' The frost is out of the ground and the snow has disappeared. It is a sight worth witnessing to see the air men start down the runway with the mud and gravel flying like animated pin wheels from the landing gear. In the last week of February nine out of ten tries were a failure and the maddening growls of the Liberty seem to abuse and cuss the field that holds its carrier down in the mud.

Then the Motor Macks take hold of the wings and back up the runway. They trudge, pushing and perspiring, and cussing. Then after repeated trials the monster bird takes the air with the water and mud dropping from tail skid and landing gear.

It must be said that the field during these operations is no place for a lady, or any place for inquiring visitors or interviewers.

Blanchfield came into the hangar one day last winter almost frozen. He said that his trip was a 'bad one.' When the Motor Macks looked over the ship it was found that one control wire was about to part and that two turn-buckles on the nose to the longerons were both cracked and ready to break, which they both did when the mechanics passed over them during inspection.

A narrow squeak from the worst that can happen to a flying man!

There is a connection held by a bolt on the wires that control the stabilizer. This connection is in the cockpit underneath the pilot's feet. A wire goes back on each side of the fuselage to the stabilizer. This is one of the most important controls of the ship. Last May during the gales Blanchfield on his trip from Elko to Reno dropped the connecting bolt from one side of this important control.

It was a hazard, a case of quick action and quick thinking, which is the middle name of this natural flier. These two wires control the level keel of the flying bird. When one happens to go "dud," there is trouble fast and furious, and danger lurks for the pilot who is unable to meet a sudden emergency like this, particularly over a canyon such as the great canyon of the Truckee to the east, with a rocky, deadly nest of dangers upon every hand.

Blanchfield worked that ship into the Reno field in a head-on wind, a feat of finesse that has but few parallels in the United States or anywhere else. How he did it he cannot explain in a manner to be exactly understood by a layman, but land he did, and fly he did, in a weather condition that makes it no easy task for a ship that is not out of order.

When he landed at the field he and the Motor Macks were without words of praise for a few minutes—it almost passed understanding. Had the accident happened over the field it would not have commanded the intense interest, as she could be banked and turned and glided down to safety.

The idea that Blanchfield brought in his ship under these conditions from a distance of 60 miles away, and in the bad weather, was a revelation of the initiative and dexterity of this wonderful pilot.

Miss Clemens of Chinatown

Sister of Mrs. Howard Gould, Who Married Chinaman, Comes Back to Haunts of Old Days After Spouse's Death in China--Recluse Cultivates Mind Behind Locked Doors

By Jessie Juliet Knox.

FOR many years I have known her — this white woman who married a Chinaman — Wong Sun Yuey Som, the "Som" simply meaning "Mrs." This woman has been much talked of, both here and in New York, because she happens tf be the sister of Mrs Howard Gould.

Now, after a period in China, she has returned again to San Francisco Chinatown. Her husband is dead I found her, known now as "Miss Clemens of Chinatown," in peculiar circumstances. But that is getting ahead of my story Let us go back to Chapter I

Let her tell in her own words, taken from a letter, why she married a Chinaman:

"When I see anyone thirsty I will give them a drink at once—not tomorrow, but today. I was nine years so poor—so hungry, that I feared for the tomorrow, that I might be insane from terrible hunger. . . . I found during the earthquake that the very Chinese people I had so faithfully served, ate and drank first, and if any were left, I might eat. I soon saw that if in my own country this was the way they served me, what would they do in China? . . . For one thing I was thankful: nine years all of Chinatown had given me not over three dollars. My own people did the same. Not one human being asked 'if Miss Clemens was dead?'

"Through it all, and out of it all, God gave me Mr Wong I am happy'"

So there you are Make of it what you will It is just as well to know why she says she did this, because, being human, that is naturally the first question people always ask. Coming from a wealthy family, as well as being the sister of Mrs. Howard Gould of New York, she could have lived in luxury, but preferred the other way.

In the San Francisco Chinatown she has lived among the burned relics of the great fire, and she even had for a time the old refuge tent draped from the ceiling, for was it not their bridal tent when they took up life together? Omar Khayam had nothing on them in the way of tents.

The first day I called on Mrs. Wong, she stood there, amidst all the symbols of ruin and decay—stood proudly by the side of her Chinese mate—husband, if you will. The Chinese people laugh when you say it, though, for the Chinese do not care much, as a general thing, for white women who marry Chinamen

Wong did not resemble the celestial god one might picture, although he didn't look bad—but he had all the suaveness and calm of the orient, and what he thought of it all no one ever knew—or ever will

He and his white wife were running a regular "Old Curiosity Shop," in which they served tea, and sold relics of the fire as well as a lot of things thrown in. There might be some who would like new things, instead of "old" ones you know

Every day Mrs. Wong stood there proudly, as it were, showing in her well nourished body that she had not been starving of late, anyhow.

The white woman, however, was either very happy or very game, and spoke of Wong with the greatest respect

"My husband is just like a [illegible] legends and everything, and if I were down in a dark well and he were there, I would be perfectly satisfied.'

Just then the 'beautiful old book' was asked what the time was, and when he responded, after due deliberation: "Five minutes past four,' she giggled, and said. "Isn't he perfectly delightful?"

On this memorable day Mrs. Wong was pleased to give us bits from her life history. First of all, she was the sister of Mrs. Howard Gould, of New York. Granted. It was interesting to hear her tell of her ostracism from society, on account of her having married a Chinaman, and she talked much of her ideas of China, and the Chinese people Many quaint bits of philosophy she had, which seemed quite sane and sweet Refined, dignified, to the manor born she stood there discussing with our little party many interesting subjects

Although she has always been subjected to the most insolent remarks from the people of her own race, she does not weaken.

"I hardly ever go into the American part of the city,' she said, "because I am subjected to such insults Boys yell at me as I pass, and say the most insulting things, and great crowds follow me."

She resumed: "I had been doing missionary work in the San Francisco Chinatown for years and at the time of the earthquake I was very ill, and hadn't a bite to eat, or [illegible] Wong came, and gave me six cents, which was every cent he had in the world He nursed me, and saved my life That settled it with me. I was done with my own race, who left me to die, and so I gave my life to the one who had saved it

"I saw my mother several months ago" she resumed her plump hands caressing and embroidery on her silken Chinese blouse and arranging the pink Chinese queu string in her braided blonde hair.

"You did?" we responded.

"Oh, [illegible] but she [illegible] entirely . . She lives in Palo Alto I was in a shop, in the American part of the city, and hurriedly passed a lady, and thought at once that it was my years I spoke out before I thought: 'Howdy you do?'. She gave me a stare, and turned and looked the other way. She was sorry then, I suppose, for she called me back, saying that she did not know me, but I could see she kept looking this way and that as if she were afraid some one might see her talking to me, so I said: 'Goodbye—I will not annoy you any further,' and hurriedly shook hands, and said goodby. When I reached home and told my husband about the encounter, he said: 'Why didn't you invite your mamma home with you?'

"Why, I didn't think of it," I said, and really felt so sorry that

I sat right down and wrote her the very kindest letter any one could [illegible] what my husband had said, and apologizing for my rudeness in neglecting to ask her, but I never received any answer."

She sighed as she spoke. What volumes in that sigh! Her mother afterward died and she was not allowed to talk with her, and so the loving word she might have spoken came too late How must she have felt?

"Yes," she picked up the thread [illegible] people will not associate with me since I married Wong. My sister, Mrs Howard Gould of New York, will have nothing to do with me, unless I give him up, but I will never do that. He is a perfect treasure, with all those old legends and things stored away in his mind. . . . . I am ostracized by the world, and those who make the greatest pretentions to being good church members are the very ones who show the least of the Christ spirit."

"Am I happy?" "Yes," she replied to a question, "but I have so many hurts and insults. I pity any one whose heart aches, and who has to bear the insults. I pity anyone whose heart aches, and who has to bear insults of the world, and who is misunderstood. . . . . I know it all. There is not a pang that I do not know."

Just then my eyes fell upon a written sign on the wall in Mrs. Wong's own handwriting:

"ANIMALS ARE SO KIND, THEY NEVER ASK QUESTIONS."

If Mrs Wong were coarse and ignorant it would be an easy matter to question her, as to the strange life she has elected to live, but she is the essence of culture and refinement; not a coarse note. [illegible] her a question.

Several years ago Mrs. Wong became reconciled with her sister, Mrs. Gould, and they were so filled with enthusiasm about the Montessori system that together they went to China to teach it, with Ying for interpreter (as Mrs. Wong had never learned to speak Chinese) They did not meet with the cordiality they had expected, however so Mrs. Gould returned to the United States, and Mrs. Wong remained there awhile with Wong, who had preceded them to China. Ah Ying afterward married Professor Chiang, who a few years ago occupied a chair at the University of California. Ying is teaching the Montessori system in China now at Pekin, and making a wonderful success of her life.

Second Chapter.

There must be a second chapter in this story—there usually is, you know for nothing can go on forever in the same way. I had lived for a long time so and Mrs. Wong at the Old Curiosity Shop, which they had on Grant avenue, Chinatown near the old St Mary's church where the car lines [illegible] glass doors of her place were always locked, and the flowers which once bloomed in the boxes outside the door were now dead.

I finally found out that the Lady of the Manor still "lived, moved and had her being" within these walls but how to reach her? That was the question, when there was never any response to the door bell, or repeated knocking on the door. I wanted so desperately to renew my friendship with this woman who had cut herself loose from the world, and so being of a very persistent nature, I at last succeeded.

Fortune favors the brave and so —the engagement being made, through the agency of the little Chinese lad who always helps me to get in where any self-respecting angel would fear to tread, the moment at last arrived Th lady I sought reached the door just as I did both coming from the street. We had a pleasant greeting, and her magic key soon placed us within the domains of her sanctum sanctorum

Enter Miss Clemens! And who is Miss Clemens pray? Who, but [illegible] taken back her old name, because her Chinese husband is dead, and has been for a year, and his bones now mingle with those of his ancestors in far away China

We settled down in this strange place, amid the relics of the old Chinatown that had been, and had a heart-to-heart talk, which extended late into the night. I seemed to get very close to Miss

March winds rattled through the streets of Chinatown we talked, as women will, about life, in its different phases. I realized, as we talked on, that her story has now reached the point of the "Prisoner of Chillon" who, having been in a dungeon for a lifetime, refused to leave when he was declared free because—he knew no other life, and his prison walls were the only home he had. This woman, too, is in a prison of her own making, but she hugs her chains.

Her walls are covered with large panels representing the anatomy of the human body; rather grue-

Glaciers in the Land of Poppies

Yes, There Are Bodies of Perpetual Ice and Snow in California, and They Play No Small Part in Past and Present Geological History; Five Are Located on Mount Shasta

By Charles Warner.

The author of this article made the first attempt to climb Mount Shasta in winter last New Year's day. He plans to attempt the climb again next winter.

CALIFORNIA a land of glaciers? Yes. Our own incomparably resourceful state, not possibly a sourceful state, not content with producing the finest cotton, oranges, grapes and many other offerings of the tropical and all tropical regions offers to the enraptured tourist a further source of enchantment in the myriad varied forms of glacial activity and splendor found at numerous points in the Sierra and in a group around the volcanic cone of grand Mount Shasta.

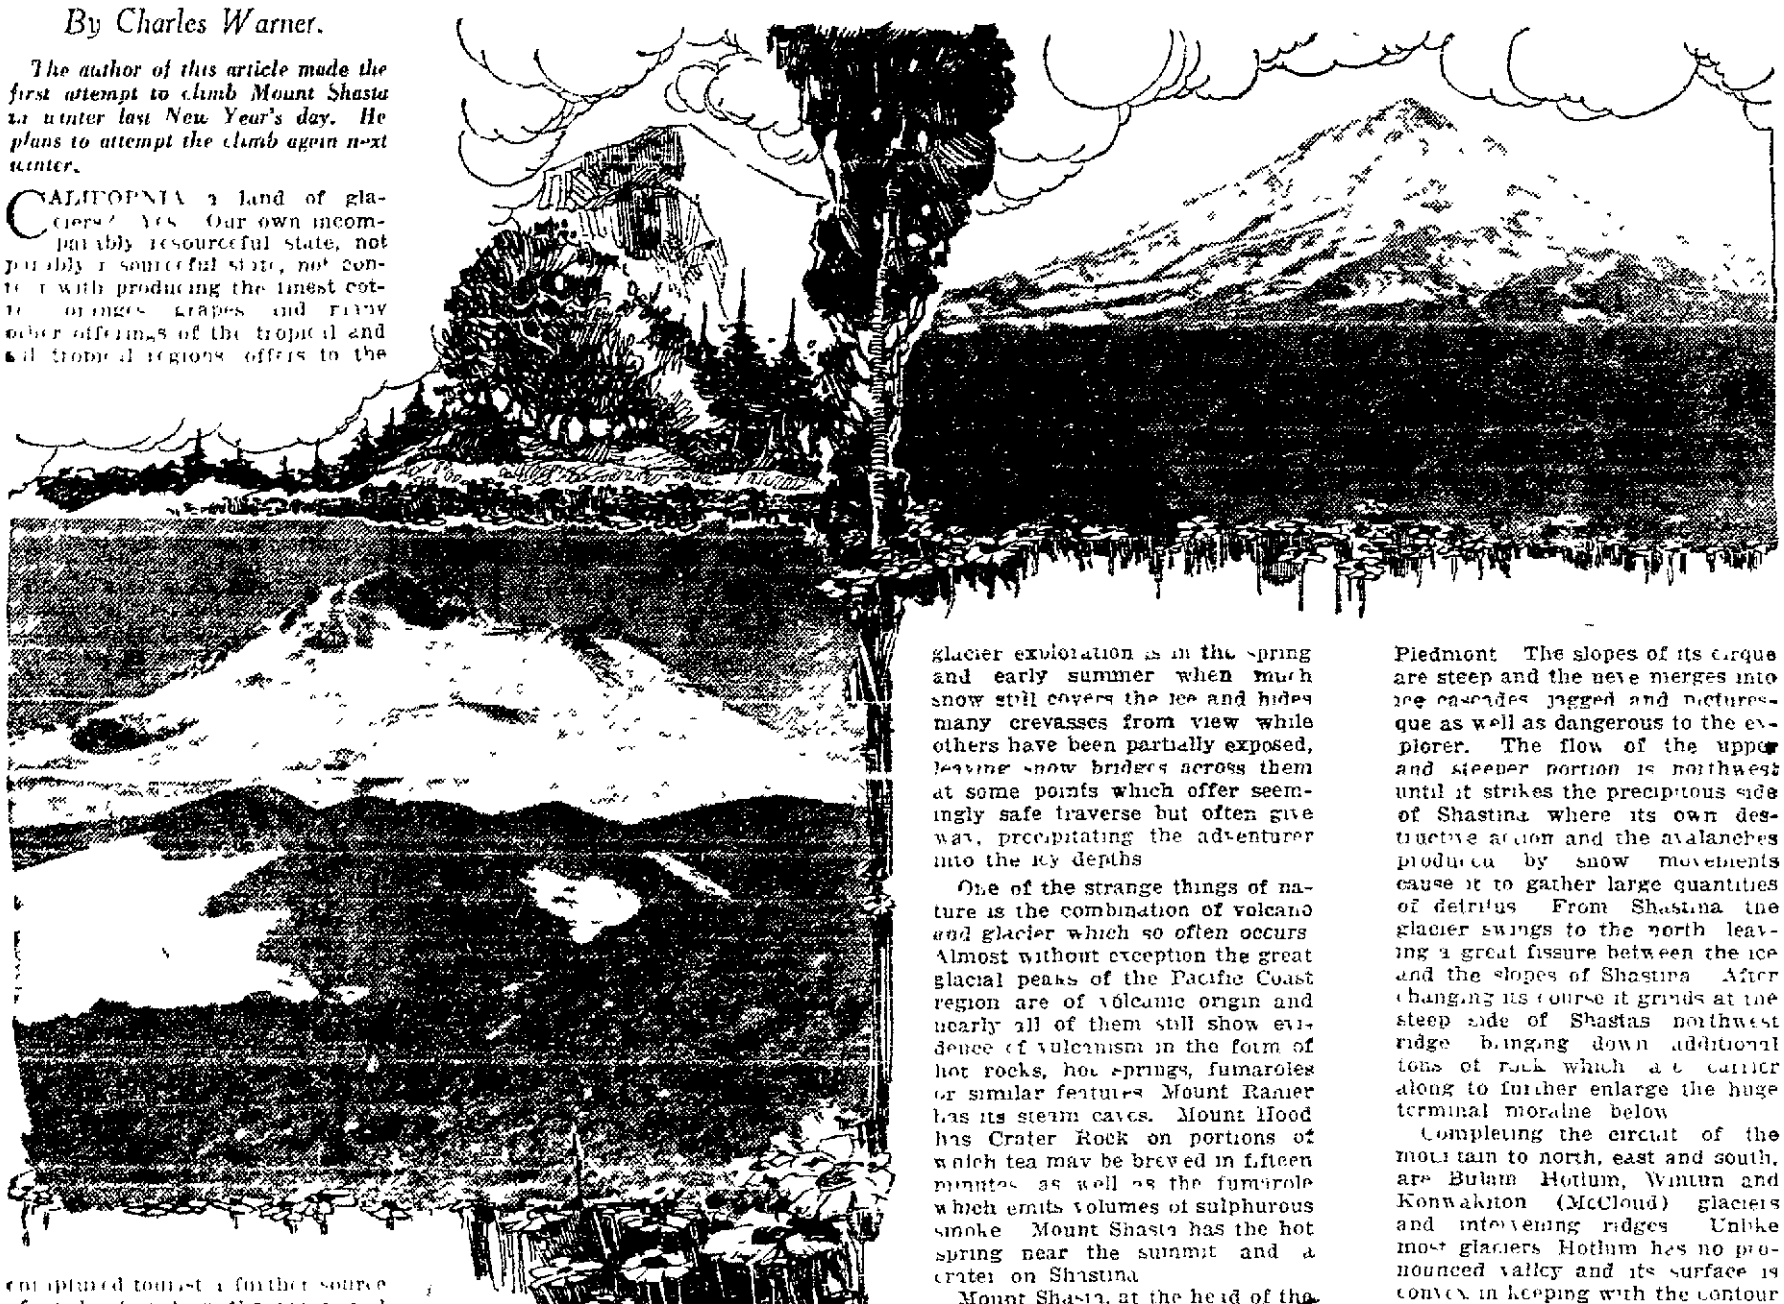

Glaciers those vast bodies of perpetual ice and snow are of course commonly associated with Alaska, Greenland and other arctic and antarctic regions and the state of California contains within its borders more glaciers than any other of the United States except Washington and Montana.

John Muir describes many of the most wonderful examples of erosion and sculpture in the High Sierra to the work of enormous bodies of moving glacier ice which cut and tore ground until they had produced the magnificent range of mountains whose innumerable peaks canyons headlands and waterfalls are an unending source of wonder to traveler and nature lover.

As the work of erosion proceeded, the continental type of glacier became broken up and diminished in size, giving in its place numerous Alpine glaciers which continued to grind and polish and to put the finishing touches on this mountain masterpiece which Nature bequeathed to the Golden state. Today some of these are still living glaciers or rivers of ice which flow a few feet annually while others have ceased their motion and are inert masses to which [illegible] supply of snow and ice and in which numerous mountain streams find their source.

In Alpina American Professor Joseph N. LeConte, Director and Treasurer of the Sierra club briefly describes the Palisade Group of the Sierra consisting of Agassiz Needle, Mt. Winchell, North Palisade, Mt. Sill and Middle Palisade, which lie along a sharp Sierra the east side of which drops several thousand feet sheer to a group of residual glaciers which are the southernmost in the United States. He also mentions Mt. Lyell glacier and four small glaciers on Mount Ritter, the former being considered to have all the characteristics of a true glacier.

Chester Versteeg, in Sierra Club Bulletin for 1922 mentions "the half-dozen snow covered residual glaciers of Glacier Divide" and also refers to the Darwin Glacier whose melting ice feeds a chain of five lakes below. In the U. S. Geological Survey of 1884-4, Israel C. Russell writes on "Existing Glaciers of the United States." These and fragments from short sketches by various travelers and writers furnish all the available data concerning Sierra glaciers, nothing comprehensive, to be sure, but ample to challenge the attention and arouse the interest of mountaineers and other lovers of the beautiful and inspiring in wild scenery.

Above, Mt. Shasta in its summer garb rising 8,450 feet above the point of view to an elevation of 14,350 feet. Below, the Hotlum glacier and moraine on the north slope of Mt. Shasta.

The time of greatest danger in glacier exploration is in the spring and early summer when much snow still covers the ice and hides many crevasses from view while others have been partially exposed, leaving snow bridges across them at some points which offer seemingly safe traverse but often give way, precipitating the adventurer into the icy depths.

One of the strange things of nature is the combination of volcano and glacier which so often occurs. Almost without exception the great glacial peaks of the Pacific Coast region are of volcanic origin and nearly all of them still show evidence of vulcanism in the form of hot rocks, hot springs, fumaroles or similar features. Mount Rainer has its steam caves. Mount Hood has Crater Rock on portions of which tea may be brewed in fifteen minutes as well as the fumarole which emits volumes of sulphurous smoke. Mount Shasta has the hot spring near the summit and a crater on Shastina.

Mount Shasta, at the head of the [illegible] in Northern California with its eighty-four cubic miles of solid mass is one of the greatest two glacial peaks of the United States. This great California mountain is the southernmost of the white sentinel peaks which dot the landscape and give to the Pacific Coast section of the United States a class of scenery unparalleled in the world.

The glaciers of Mount Shasta are five in number each being of size and character to justify exploration. Principal among them is Whitney Glacier on the northwest slope of the mountain, which moves between Shasta proper and Shastina. Few if any of the great ice rivers of America exemplify to a greater degree the various features of the well known glaciers of the Swiss and Austrian Alps.

Whitney Glacier is from one to two thousand feet wide and two and a half miles long. If it could be dropped on the city of Oakland, it would destroy an area as wide as from the city hall to Lake Merritt and extending northerly to Piedmont. The slopes of its cirque are steep and the neve merges into ice cascades jagged and picturesque as well as dangerous to the explorer. The flow of the upper and steeper portion is northwest until it strikes the precipitous side of Shastina where its own destructive action and the avalanches produced by snow movements cause it to gather large quantities of detritus. From Shastina the glacier swings to the north leaving a great fissure between the ice and the slopes of Shastina. After changing its course it grinds at the steep side of Shastas northwest ridge bringing down additional tons of rock which are carried along to further enlarge the huge terminal moraine below.

Completing the circuit of the mountain to north, east and south, are Bulam Hotlum, Wintun and Konwakiton (McCloud) glaciers and intervening ridges. Unlike most glaciers Hotlum has no pronounced valley and its surface is convex in keeping with the contour of the mountain.

It is interesting and spectacular because of its roughness, its medial and terminal moraines and the yawning crevasses which cut deeply into its huge mass estimated to be several hundred feet thick. Wintun Glacier has no terminal moraine but ends in a "snout" or abrupt declivity from the foot of [illegible] by the waters of Ash Creek. Konwakiton Glacier is an interesting example of glacier recession, showing clear evidence of action by the larger glacier of which it was the upper portion.

To have a snow bridge give way under foot to fall apparently to certain death to have the sudden realization that all is over, and then to have it dawn upon your semi-paralyzed senses that you are still alive through having caught on a projecting ice shelf while the mass of snow shot on down into the bowels of the glacier, this rapid succession of events represents but one of many written in the annals and engraved in the consciousness of explorers of the glaciers of Shasta and other peaks.

The High Sierra extends from Owens Lake in Southern California to Lake Tahoe. According to Russell the glaciers of the Sierra feature that section between 36 degrees 30 minutes and 38 degrees latitude at about 11,500 feet elevation, the one on Mount Lyell being the lowest, at 11,000 feet.

Nine are stated to exist within the rim of Mono Lake and a somewhat larger number among the mountains from which flow the Tuolumne, Merced and San Joaquin, nearly all being on the north slopes of mountain peaks. There are said to be glaciers of Mount Dana, Mount McClure and Mount Conness. All told it is probable that upward of thirty mountain glaciers exist around and among [illegible].

With the completion of Shasta Alpine Lodge erected on Mount Shasta by M. Hall McAllister, Sierra club director and others, last summer, and the widespread attention since attracted to the great eminence through the climb last winter, many thousands of mountaineers and their friends will be drawn to Mount Shasta in the very near future. Alpine ascents will soon be recognized as features of travel to our state and California will become a center of glacial exploration and study, not only on California's greatest mountain but among the peaks of the High Sierra as well.

MISS CLEMENS, CHINATOWN—HER STORY

some, but necessary to her studies just now. The old relics, which were formerly on sale, are now located to a back seat for the shop is no longer open to tourists. She is making an intensive study [illegible] is very much absorbed in it. "I am nothing but a mentalist," she said, and is doing nothing but studying now, anatomy, psychology, whatnot.

"What was the matter with your husband?" I questioned. "He died of a broken heart," she sighed. He had always said that if I ever became very ill he would die. When I returned here from China [illegible] had two nurses. When the news reached him he soon died."

"Have you never at any time been sorry you married him?" I ventured. "Never," she smiled. "He was beautiful, always. It had to be—I don't know why; no one knows why, but it sometimes makes me believe in re-incarnation."

The door bell rang, and the doorknob rattled, as we sat there talking, but it did not disturb her in the least, for she has acquired all the poise of the Orient. "So many insults I have received from white men, who used to come into the shop," she remarked, "for they have no use for a white woman who marries a Chinaman. People think I am a low, ignorant person, and judge me that way."

Miss Clemens has plenty of money, and could live at any of the high priced hotels, or have a [illegible] I asked her: "Why do you stay here now? Your husband is dead, and that ends your Chinese life. . . . My dear . . . get out of Chinatown, since you no longer care for the Chinese people. Mingle with people of your own race; have your lectures, your books, your friends. Why do you stay here?"

"I don't know," she replied, laconically. "The time has not [illegible] when it does.

"Isn't life strange?" she queried in a childish way. "I can't blame people for thinking I am low and ignorant," she resumed, "for that is the type of a white woman who always marries a Chinaman."

And so it is with her just now. She is through with one race and the other race is through with her. She will have to begin back at the beginning, she says, and reconstruct her whole life.

Fortunately she has plenty of money, so she will not need to worry about that, but that will not bring back youth with its lost ideals.

Those Pink-cheeked Kids of '70

Santa Rosa Gives Lie to "Human Scrap Heap" Theory; Seventy-three Men Above Seventy Cut Capers in Unique "Borrowed Time Club,' Making Old Age Young

By Omar Moffatt.

"Has there any old fellow got mixed with the boys?
If there has, take him out without making a noise;
Hang the Almanac's spite and the catalogue's cheat,
Old Time is a liar—we're twenty tonight!"

THAT last line of Oliver Wendall Holmes' bit of whimsy is the slogan when the 73 men of Santa Rosa, Sonoma county, members of the "Borrowed Time Club," meet to hurl the challenge of optimism at Time's black gestures and to enjoy frankly and happily the fruits of long lives.

To them old age, their youth and youth's pleasures behind them, does not mean a lane of lonely years down which they must travel dolefully to the grave; old age is a respite from the toils and troubles of a more active period of life, and they are enjoying to the full their old age in one of the most unique organizations of old folk in the United States.

"The Borrowed Time Club" of Santa Rosa now, after a year of existence, has a membership roll counting 73 residents of Santa Rosa and vicinity who have lived the span of three score years and ten allotted to mankind. At a time of life when most men and women believe they have nothing more to do, having passed the "three score years and ten," these 73 folk of Sonoma county are finding new joys and companionship, new inspirations to continued endeavor and encouragement against that loneliness which is the ogre confronting most persons approaching old age.

Leaders of the club have estimated that the combined ages of the members equals the sum of 4623 years, an average age of 74.64 years for each member. By the way, this term "borrowed time," which the cheery old-timers of Santa Rosa have taken for their club name is misleading; it should be "Conserved Time" for each [illegible] of sensible living, hard work and appreciation for happiness which shames the occasional pessimism of us younger folk.

Let us imagine Father Chronos, a mighty figure, cutting short the lease of life for some, granting new loans to others, and balancing his bill of fate behind the counter before which hangs the three gold balls of the pawnbroker. We have timers of Santa Rosa going before him for "borrowed time."

"What have you to offer as interest on this loan?" Father Chronos asks.

"This at the age of 71," replies his client, J. W. Curry, former president of the club.

And straightway he begins to swing Indian clubs vigorously. He swings them five minutes, ten minutes, half an hour, easily and with the technique of a youngster of 30 years.

"More borrowed time is granted," says Father Chronos.

Another who would borrow more time comes before him.

"I offer this for interest," he says, and exhibits a beautiful garden, well cultivated and showing evidence of skilful care. The borrower is Isaac S. Tillinghast, known throughout the West for his plant nurseries.

At the age of 71 Tillinghast is supervising personally the care of his gardens and is able to put in a hard day's work with hoe and spade.

Members of the "Borrowed Time Club" set at variance all tables of mortality, upset theories of disease, microbes, goat glands and fakes, for did these theories hold good among them the club would not meet regularly [illegible] instead there would be empty chairs, when now there are none.

Chauncey Depew, Uncle Joe Cannon, Thomas A. Edison, Luther Burbank, General Nelson A. Miles, Clemenceau, who have no advantage over these men in years at least, are held as examples of continued activities in spite of old age.

"If they can do it, we can do it," says W. J. McClure, president of [illegible]

One of the latest developments of the club is the dancing class organized several weeks ago in order that some of the more spry members might learn calisthenics and rhythmic dancing! Imagine a squad of men all more than 70 years of age, doing the daily dozen to the tune of a phonograph record!

The club members have guarded from the public an action which they may have taken to adopt for their use the fox trot, the one-step, the Chicago and other modern dances. Three score years and ten have taught them discretion.

Santa Rosa challenges these old men. With the traveling bag is Bill Critchlow, world's oldest traveling salesman, 93, of Shelbina, Mo., who makes his trips regularly. Below is Jack Kridner of Cincinnati, 74, who has been a motorman for 48 years and is still at it.

In Santa Rosa, a small community of 12,000 typical of California is a Borrowed Time Club of 73 members. If Seattle or Chicago, the other two cities claiming similar clubs, had a proportionate membership their lists would show thousands instead of the 300 as at present.

Let President McClure tell us about the borrowed timers and their theories.

"These men of Santa Rosa have given the lie to the 'Human Scrap Heap' theory that when a man passes 50 he is on the decline and is ready to drop out of line or be dropped out by the younger generation. Think of the men who are lonely and out of the center of things at 50 years! They sit humped in their easy chairs at night, silent, gloomy, humble, or testy, while the younger folks dance and sing and are happy. There is no reason for it; it is the wrong mental attitude but common.

"There was one man in Chicago who, although an old man himself did not believe in the 'Human Scrap Heap' theory and being in a position to prove his theory by actual demonstration, proceeded to pick up men of 45, 50 and 60 years of age, men whom the world considered on the down grade in life, and give them position of responsibility—and every man made good. Julius Rosenwald will be remembered for his fight against the theory of age limitations.

"Creative genius, application, experience, ability are the possessions [illegible] by [illegible] living and right thought preserved his mentality and physical being.

[illegible] Burbank, a member of our club, for his greatest achievements have been gained at the 'three score years and ten' period.

"Sixteen of our members are war veterans, one of them, H. C. Brown, whose age is 92, is one of the very few survivors of the war with Mexico. All these have disregarded danger for they are and always have been optimists. Neither luck nor chance has played [illegible] a certain contingent in the World War army was fatalistic; the members believed that in this battle or the next they would fall, for it was their 'fate' they said, and fall they did.

"One of our members, J. W. Curry, at a recent meeting gave an exhibition of fancy club swinging. He is 73 years old. Now it takes strength and training to swing Indian clubs, and I have seen athletes many years younger fail to equal the fidility Curry shows in club swinging.

There is J. S. Taylor, Sonoma county's grand old man, and one of the first white children born in this state. He is 94 years old, and daily exemplifies the poetic statement, 'The century's aloe flowers today.'

"When Taylor was kicked by a horse and had his leg broken two years ago he didn't give up hope for many more years of happy life. He rallied and astonished the doctors by his recuperative powers. Today he walks about as spry and cheery as a boy of 50.

"H. C. Brown, 92 years old, is one of the best speakers in our club and never a meeting goes by that he doesn't entertain us with recitations and short comic sketches. He's a fine fellow and one of the best examples of the fun an old man can have.

"B. F. Bennyhoff is doing wonderful work as an educational leader in Santa Rosa and he is 75 years old.

"The history of the Borrowed Time Club is of more interest to members perhaps than to the general public, although if it was better known it might lead to the organization of other clubs in California cities.

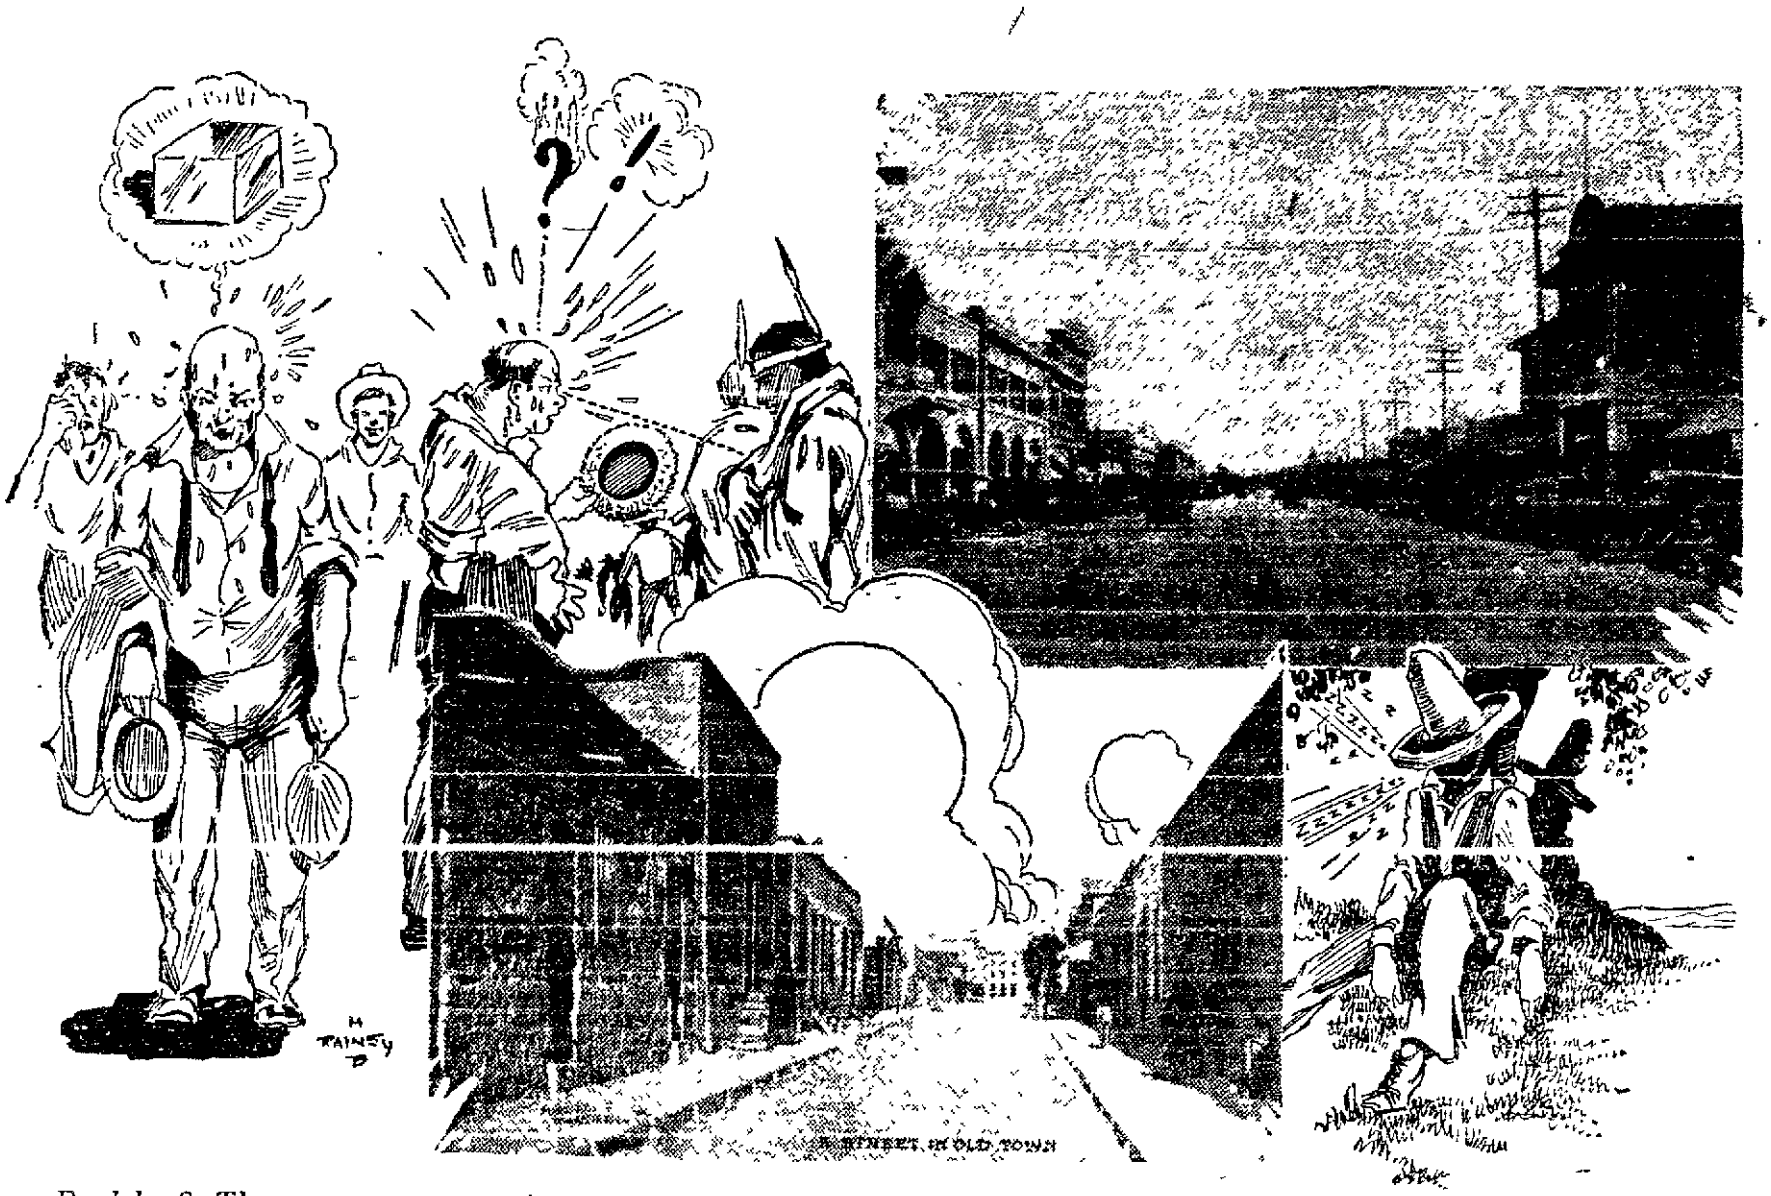

"The club began in Oak Park, a suburg of Chicago, when a few old men met in a harness shop run by Father Robbins. They met for social purposes and they did not bewail the fact they were old, nor did they throw up their hands at the doings of the younger generation. The topics of conversation were of the present, and finally the organization of the club was effected. One was formed later in Seattle by F. A. Arnold."

Members of the club, who for the greater part reside in or near Santa Rosa, and their ages are:

The Hottest Town On Earth

They Tell Many Tales of Yuma, But the Half Remains Untold; Yet Historic Old River Fort Is a Growing, Thriving American City, Despite Its Remarkable Climate

By John S. Thomas

EVERYONE, everywhere, has heard the name of Yuma, synonym for unbearable heat. While not the hottest spot on earth—there are a few hotter in Death Valley under sea level—Yuma is by far the hottest city on earth. For Yuma, in spite of climatic handicaps, is growing rapidly and has become a real American city in every sense of the word.

Twenty miles from the Mexican border, down where the lazy Rio Colorado winds its way through the parched desert sands and is joined by the sea green waters of the Gila lies Yuma, in Arizona (Indian, probably meaning sons of the river). This little town was first called Colorado City, then Arizona City and later was given the name of Yuma.

Here the chuckwalla, a cross between a frog and a lizard (sauromalus ater) and which was much prized by Yuma Indians as a food, runs his tongue out for fresh air in the hot summer days. The Gila Monster—the largest lizard in North America—rears himself up and tries in vain to find a cool spot on the shady side of a Spanish bayonet cactus. The Gila Monster's (Heloderma suspectum) bite, as reported by modern physicians, is not poisonous to man.

The native Mexican rolls a corn husk cigarette, throws off his broad brimmed sombrero with abandon and takes a noonday siesta.

Yuma figures prominently in the early Spanish annals.

In September, 1700, Father Kino, a Jesuit Catholic priest and explorer with the Beenul expedition from Dolores, N. M., was one of the first to formally explore Arizona and enter Yuma county. He gave the name of San Dionsitos [illegible] junction of the Gila with the Colorado, the present site of Yuma.

Fort Yuma in old times was the center of desert life of the great Southwest.

Before 1873 Yuma was called Arizona City, and was the principal town in Arizona, being the main distributing point for all the military posts and mining camps in the territory. The coming of the [illegible] away its commercial activity and other towns, as Tucson and Phoenix, outrivaled it.

Yuma is noted for two things—the extreme dyrness of its climate and its hot summers.

The average rainfall in Yuma is only 1.3 inches—the lowest recorded in the United States.

It is not unusual for the mercury to go up to 130 degrees Fahrenheit in the hot summer months of July and August. The average temperature for July is about 98 degrees Fahrenheit.

A strange thing about the old inhabitants of this town is that they only smile when you wipe the perspiration from your face and complain about the heat, saying:

"Why this is not hot!"

You never can get an Arizonan to admit feeling the hot weather. The dry atmosphere keeps the summer heat from being oppressive, otherwise there would be more prostrations from the heat.

The water in pipes exposed to the sun is so hot in summer that you cannot take a shower bath without letting the water run for five or ten minutes, otherwise you would be scalded.

In old times the territorial state prison of Arizona was situated at Yuma. In summer Yuma was hot enough, but if Yuma was hotter than hades the prison was hotter than two of them. Located at this prison was an open quarry called a "glory hole," where the worst convicts were compelled to labor in the burning sun during the hot summer months. This punishment was too severe even for the old-timers of Arizona, and the state prison was removed to a milder climate, at Florence, Pinal county. In the old "pen" at Yuma some of the most desperate criminals of the United States were confined.

In the days before the railroad built the great iron bridge across the Colorado, there was a ferry across the river. I have seen the river, however, when you could ford it with a horse and buggy.

There is some doubt as to the exact year in which Dr. Langdon established his first ferry across the Colorado, whether it was late in 1849 or 1850.

A man named Glanton killed the manager of this ferry and made a fortune in those days by exacting heavy tributes from the emigrants [illegible] California.

Glanton disregarded the rights of the Indians and he and his associates were killed by them. Shortly afterwards, in July, 1850, Jaegar and Hartshorn headed a party who re-established the ferry and built their own boat on the ground from cottonwood trees growing on the bank.

That same year Major Heintzelman, then in charge of the army [illegible] military post at Colorado City, afterwards called Arizona City, then Fort Yuma.

Major Heintzelman left ten men here under Lieutenant Sweeny, and the soldiers and ferrymen all occupied the structure which had been erected by the Glanton party.

After Major Heintzelman's departure for San Diego the Indians became treacherous and he had to be recalled to chastise the Yumas for their many murders and robberies. With 500 men, after two years of actual warfare, he succeeded in reducing the Yumas, who never afterwards presumed to contend against white power.

After the Indian subjection Fort Yuma became a noted frontier post. The once powerful and wealthy Indians did the chores and menial offices for the whites and the younger generation attended the Indian school at old Fort Yuma.

Lieutenant Whipple of the United States Topographical Engineers tells of the Yuma Indians in 1849. They were called at that time the "Cuchans."

"Santiago, their chief, wore a blue great coat and a fancy cotton handkerchief bound his head; his legs and feet were bare. Others were clad in the simple breech-cloth. All were mounted on spirited horses. The road up the bank to the left is the emigrant trail over the deep, drifting sand of the desert. Taking the more circuitous route to the right, we were escorted by these Indians a short distance to their village in the canadas, luxuriant with maize and melons (zandias).

"We were at once surrounded by great numbers of men and women evincing friendliness, curiosity and intelligence. The women are generally fat, and their dress consists of a fringe made of strips of bark, bound about the hips and hanging closely to the middle of the thighs. The men are large, muscular and well formed, with pleasing countenances lighted by intelligence.

"I doubt whether America can boast a finer race of Indians. Their warriors wear the white bead-cloth and their hair hanging in plaits to the middle of their backs is adorned with eagle feathers and the rattle of a rattlesnake. They are exquisite horsemen and carry the bow and lance with inimitable grace."

The present site of Yuma was not included under the limits of the United States until the Gadsden purchase in 1854. When the state of California was organized in 1850 the commission adopted the old boundary line of old Mexico as the boundary line of the state, and consequently assumed jurisdiction over the strip of land on the bank of the Colorado opposite Fort Yuma, which now joins Yuma City.

rado river after passing through the gorge between Fort Yuma and the opposite bank, the boundary line of California in the vicinity includes both banks of the Colorado river down to the crossing at Pilot Knob, some nine miles distant.

Yuma is the practical head of navigation of the Colorado river. Small steamboats come up here from the Gulf of California. This was the route adopted for carrying in supplies before the advent of the railroad.

The first steamer to reach Yuma was the "Uncle Sam," in September, 1852. The steamer was brought by Captain Turnbull on a schooner to the head of the Gulf and there put together for the river trip.

Yuma has a present population, according to the last census, of over 4000. It has a federal building, a high school, Elks Home, modern stores, ice plants, laundries, etc.

Across the river at old Fort Yuma is the government Indian school.

The main industries of the surrounding country are farming and mining. The old Yuma of twenty years ago is fading away—fading in the shadows of the old West.

Sad to contemplate, in one way, the desert days of Remington, Russell, Zane Grey and Owen Wistler are vanishing from the landscape. On the other hand, the wonderful development of Yuma in particular in recent years shows that this once Arizona desert town is fast coming into its own. No longer the old wood-burning locomotive whistles for the little frontier towns. No longer the blanketed squaws and papooses line up at the little board depots, nor the mangy dogs bark at the coyotes at the edge of town. No longer dirty Mexican children squat in the sandy caminas and play. The big-hatted Mexican no longer stands under his senorita's window picking the strings of his guitar on moonlight nights.

Yuma is on a steady boom with its modern buildings, school houses, stores and churches. But one phase of the old Yuma still remains—the heat.

Despite the oppressive heat in the summer time Yuma has one of the finest climates in the United States in winter time—clear and mild.

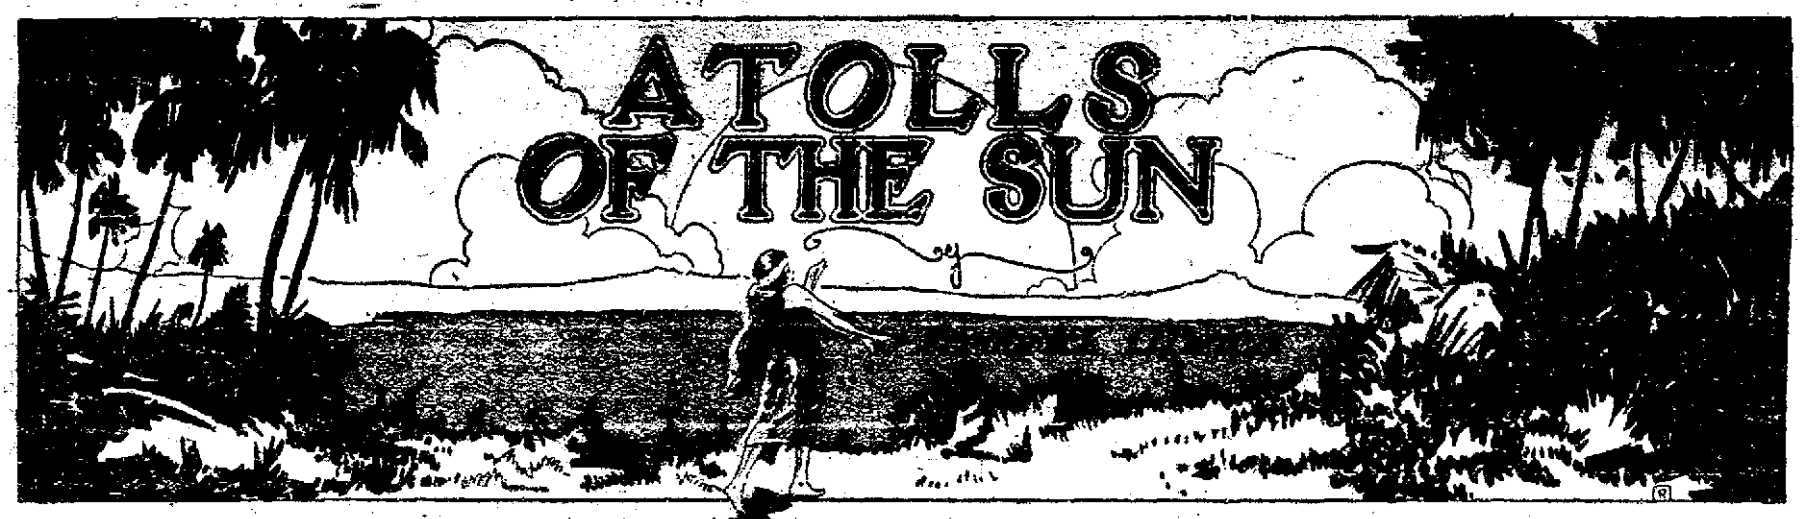

Yuma county, on account of its dry climate, is visited by many.

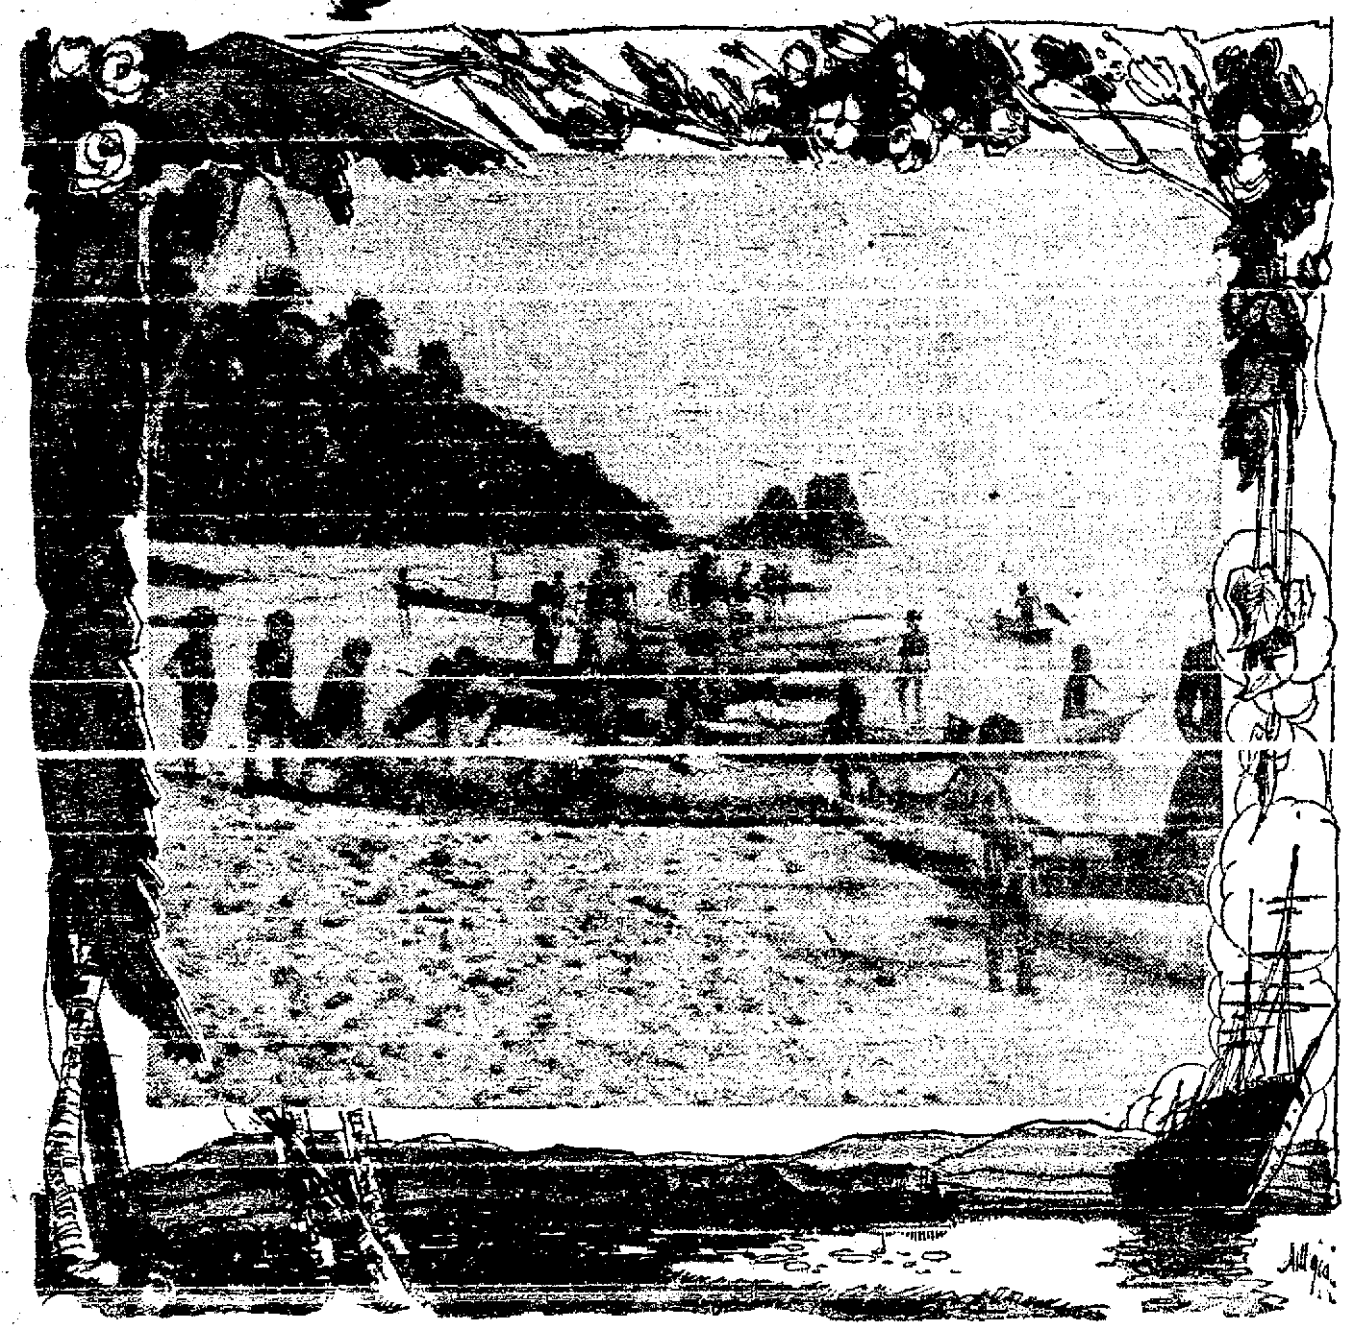

Now, the striking feature about this list of Borrowed Timers is the fact that none of them are given to passing their time reminiscing of days gone by—the by-laws of the club forbid that—nor do they claim special privileges by reason of old age or past experience. They do not ask for service or support because they were pioneers; they in whatever endeavor or activity in which they may be engaged.

In a recent report to the club, President McClure announced the names of 164 on the membership roles, 73 of which are full members, the remaining associate members. The associate members include 74 women. Qualifications for full membership require that the applicant be 70 years of age. The women's ages are never questioned, so none of them are given full membership.

Assured that I was not another Tahiti trader, Mapuhi put out his great hands and took into them one of mine, and pressed it, as he said in Paumotuan, "My island is yours."

I was loath to talk my poor Paumotuan, because I wanted to get as closely as possible to the mind of this noblest of his tribe; and so I conversed in French, except when I appealed to the elders for more exact meanings in Paumotuan.

"Mapuhi," I began, "even in San Francisco sailors know your skill in these dangerous waters."

"Ah, San Francisco!" said Mapuhi, regretfully. "I was there. I had a ship built there, and I sailed it to Takaroa. I lived there a week in your great house into which one drives with horses."

I conjured a picture of Mapuhi coming in a hack from the dock in San Francisco to the Palace Hotel, and of the striking contrast between this mighty man of these isles and the little men of finance and of commerce who must have dined about him. Kalakaua, king of the Hawaiian Islands, had lived there, and had died there. But charming as was that prince of bons vivants, he was nevertheless the victim of the white man's vices, and as years passed, his appearance became that of an overfed, overginned head porter. Even the patrons of the Palace must have had some vision of this man Mapuhi on the deck of his schooner, his vast chest and arms bare, his hair blown by the wind. Or, emerging from the waters of the lagoon, arising from the plunge to the coral cave where the lethal shark looks for prey. This was what he spoke in face and form to me.

"I had seven nights," said Mapuhi, "in your great house, and seven days in your streets. The people were like the fish in the lagoon of Pukapuka, where no man seeks them, and where they crowd each other until they kill. I went in a room from the ground to where I slept, a room that moved on a cord; and I rode in other rooms that moved about the roads on iron bands in which people sat who never said a word to one another, and who never spoke to me. As I walked in the roads they were dark as in the cocoanut-groves, for your houses make caves of the roads, as under the barrier-reef."

"But, Mapuhi," I said, "we are happy in our way."

"You do not laugh much," returned the chief. "Only I heard the laughter from the houses in which you sold rum. I am a good Mormon. I do not now drink your mad waters, but in your city only the mad waters made men happy. I was a gentile myself many years and did not know the truth. I, too, drank the mad waters."

Mapuhi's eyes sought the picture of Brigham Young which was on the wall, but mine went to the figures of the prize-fighters, Jeffries and Johnson. Mapuhi intercepted my glance and immediately became alert.

"Was it possible that I had ever seen Teferite or Tihonitone?"

This question was put to Elder Overton, who hesitated to interpret. The subject was a scandal throughout the Paumotus. I read that in the preacher's face, but, comprehending the import of the words, I said that I knew Teferite: that he lived very near me, and that I saw him often in his store. Once or twice I had bought goods of him. He was getting very fat since Tihonitone had whipped him, and most of his time he hunted fish and wild animals. Tihonitone, the neega, as the Paumotuans call Afro-Americans, I had seen more than once, I said.

"That neega knocked down the white Teferite and took the hundreds of thousands of francs given the winner," said Mapuhi, with spirit. "They are both great men, but the neega is the greatest. Next to the chiefs of the Mormon church, they are the greatest Americans."

"Well, Teddy Roosevelt?" I demanded.

He did not know the man. An acquaintance in Tahiti sent him now and then the pink paper which contained the pictures of fighting men, of fighting dogs, and of women whose bosoms and legs were bare. America must now be full of these fights, and of beautiful women almost naked, he said.

"Your two most famous men, Teferite and Tihonitone, sell rum. The goods you bought of Teferite was rum, for he keeps a rum store in Los Angelese, and the neega in Keekago."

Each sentence tore the elders' hearts, but Mapuhi salved their wounds.

"These men are gentiles, I know," know," he concluded. "The elders have informed me. Mormons sell no rum. But tell me, is Tihonitone master of his white wife? I have her picture. She is beautiful."

Overton frowned.

"Mapuhi," he said, gently, "you make too much of those 'Police Gazette' pictures. The godly in America never see them. They are for the rum-drinkers, and are found only in the resorts of the wicked. Strength is admirable, but the fighting men of our country are the Philistines whom Jehovah chastised."

To me, in English, the Utahan said: "That coon's licking the white man has cost the whole white race dear. A preacher in India told me England could better have afforded to give Johnson five million dollars, for what it has cost in troops. The same in Africa. The evil of prize-fighting was never better exemplified. Jeffries' beating has hurt religion seriously."

Mapuhi and the elders left the room, and returned in a few minutes in black broadcloth coats and high white collars, in which they sweated woefully. We all walked to the temple. It was close beside the beach, built of coral blocks, smeared with cement, white as the ocean foam. Its iron roof, painted crimson, was the only spot of color on the motu, except the nodding palms.

"It is like the blood of the martyrs," exclaimed Overton, piously. "The temple was begun over twenty years ago. Nine years it took to build it, because the converts were few and poor, and labor scarce. Twice cyclones leveled it. Ten years ago the Takaroans began it again, and for two years it has been completed. I know of no more sublime monument to the true religion than coral is a redeemed soul. If only the gentiles in America knew the work we were doing!"

We entered the temple reverently, the congregation, already seated, nearly filling it. On its rude coral floor were rough benches accommodating five or six persons each. A pulpit of gingerbread scrollwork, the only other furniture, was apologized for by De Kalb.

"It was the plainest we could get. It was made for the Catholics. They like 'em fancy, like their religion."

Elder Overton preached the sermon. De Kalb read from the Bible and the "Book of Mormon." The people who filled the edifice paid all attention. Serious always in their demeanor, except when affected by alcohol, they were positively melancholy in religion. All who could afford it wore black, and the oldsters had long frock coats of funereal hue, and collars like the Americans.

After the services, I broached to the elders my necessity of a habitation. With the diving season opening in a few weeks, divers and traders would be at Takaroa from all about, and the 140 people of the atoll would be multiplied three or four times. Most of these divers would crowd in the houses of the natives, and the majority of the traders would live on their schooners. Mapuhi regretted that all his accommodations were bespoken.

The elders took me to the house of Nohea, a small, neat cottage, at the end of the avenue leading from the mole, an avenue all shining white with coral sand. It reminded me of the shell roads of my native state, Maryland, in my childhood. It was lined with the shanties and huts of the inhabitants.

Nohea greeted me quietly. He was a dark man, six feet four inches in height, big all over, his muscles well insulated by deep fat, and with the placid gravity of a Yeddo wrestler. He was taciturn, reserved, and melancholy. Most of these natives became spiritually strained when, as commonly, late in life, they gave up the wicked pleasures of the flesh—alcohol, tobacco, and philandering. They lost toleration for unrighteousness, and the joy that in their unregenerate state had oozed from their wicked pores turned to acid.

A friend and sometime partner of Nohea was, next to Mapuhi, the foremost figure in the archipelago. He was not a trader, except that he sold his pearls, shell, and copra for money and merchandise; but he had dignity, strength, and personality—not quite as had Mapuhi, but more than any other Takaroan. Among Paumotuans few men showed distinctive character. Nohea possessed that, and also physical strength and skill for the diving, for the handling of boats, and for the making of copra. When there was no white missionary at Takaroa, he was the hierophant of the Mormon church. He conducted the services and advised the faithful, collected the tithes, and admonished the sinners. He did not fail in zeal for that task. Nohea painted a hell darker than a shark's jaws, a pit of horror, lit by black flames which burned the non-Mormons, and a heaven on earth where baked pig was a free dish at all hours. The Mormon heaven is nearer the Mussulman's than the Christian's. Food and rills of fresh water, many beautiful and passionate wives, song and feasting, were promised the Paumotuan. Golden harps and streets of pearl would hardly have brought their tithes to the church treasury.

The very day I joined him I began to see things through his eyes. I was bathing at dusk in the clear waters of the lagoon near our home. The severe heat of the equatorial day had passed and the still salt lake was as refreshing to my sun - stricken and coral-scratched body as the spring of the oasis to the parched traveler. The night was riding fast after the sunken sun, and driving the last gleam of color from the sky.

As I floated at ease upon the quiet surface of the pale-green lagoon, the sounds of the murmurous twilight—the rustling of the trees and the splash of the surf on the outer shore—were made discordant by a peculiar scraping noise nearby. I turned lazily over on my face and raised my head from the water.

On the coral in the deceptive half-light of the crepuscule was a hideous, shell-backed monster, which had emerged from an unseen lair, and moved slowly and lumberingly toward the cocoanut-trees. Its motions and appearance, in the semi-obscurity, took on the quality of a dream-beast, affrighting in its amazing novelty. It was like a great paper-mache animals in a pantomime.

It might advance to the lagoon and approach me in an element in which it would be my master. I swam swiftly to shore and called, "Nohea!"

My companion came from near our hut, where on the red-hot coral stones, which had been made to glow by a fire of cocoanut-husks, he cooked the fish he had caught that afternoon.

He looked at me inquiringly, and I pointed to the alarming creature now disappearing in the palm-grove.

"Auc!" he cried irascibly, and

On the Golden Trail—Crossing the Isthmus In Forty-nine

by Harry C. Peterson

"Man Wants But Little Here Below, But on the Isthmus He Wants Even Less, Comments One Who Joined Long Caravan Who Sailed to Panama and Crossed Overland, Thence Coming to California by Boat to San Francisco.

HARRY C. PETERSON.

IF you had spent your last cent for equipment, food and supplies, and your passage to California in '49, would you sit back and laugh long and loud if you found some one had robbed you of nearly everything you had brought more than half way on your journey?

And if your friends looked at you pityingly and murmured, "Poor cuss, he's gone crazy over his loss," would you shut up or keep right on laughing?

"He who laughs last laughs best," but this fellow laughs first, last, and all the time. Listen to his story, as related by Delaware Dick:

"I was on the homestead when I first heard the news that gold had been discovered in California and that it was thicker than the rocks on our farm; and our farm was a blue ribbon ram when it came to cobbles. Dad and I worked sixteen hours a day to make our living. We had plenty of land, but it was veneered most beautifully with rocks and stumps. Still we had saved a few dollars. Dad and I talked it over. I'd take the ready cash, go to California, pick up a few bucketfuls of nuggets, come back and live in ease. No more work for father, no more work for mother. Just one long life of ease. Our future was all provided for. I merely had to connect with it.

In New York they separated me from most of the present, in so much as I bought nearly everything recommended to me. I was [illegible] than the water cress down below our pigsty. I began to ripen as soon as we got on shipboard.

Before we had arrived at the Isthmus I had disposed of all my canned goods. I had a lot of fun watching the sharks flop belly up in order to swallow can after can generous in our enthusiasm. We tried our best to pitch in an extra can or two every time a shark opened his mouth. True, we hoped to break out a few of his teeth when we did it, but if we failed we knew that we had him anyhow, for if those cans made as much noise when they opened in that shark's belly as they did when they exploded in the ship's hold, then mister shark must have had a wonderful intensive Fourth of July celebration.

But I still had all my baggage and equipment when I landed at Chargres. We had been advised by the agent at New York to contract with "Doc" White for the transportation of our goods across the Isthmus. That there be no delay or confusion when we arrive there, "Doc" had most thoughtfully collected in advance. He was the first ashore, he must see to his native runners. That was the last we ever saw of "Doc" White.

So I decided to try my hand at it. Arranged to have my stuff put ashore that morning. I preceded it.

There wasn't much to see of Charges. It contained probably 30 huts of reeds thatched with palm leaves. The men were squalid, unclean in appearance and habits. In one particular they at least surpassed all of us. None wore dirty clothes. Nor clean ones. Of [illegible] leaves there were plenty, but they seemed unaware of its ulitarian virtues.

Some of them wore Panama hats. These they removed when they went swimming.

The old fortifications were still in evidence, dismantled, walls crumbling, delapidated, dusty and not even romantic in appearance.

The garrison consisted of three goats and two children, all sleeping in the shade. The future held no terrors for them.

Sanitary conditions were absolutely unknown. It had the reputation of being the most unhealthy spot in the world. I believe it.

I walked around trying to get some of the native peons to dicker with me on the transportation of my things across the Isthmus. They were insolent, independent, and hard to deal with.

By dint of much talking, shrugging of shoulders, showing of cash, wriggling my fingers, and wrinkling my face, I conveyed the information that I wanted some men to take myself and baggage across to Panama. I could have saved many of my contortions had I been aware of the fact then that these dull looking peons understood nearly everything I said, but were playing me for more money. They motioned to a fellow in a shack near by. He came over. Talked a little English. Money must be paid in advance, half down and half when they came in sight of Panama. So I paid him half the price agreed upon, took him to the beach to show him my outfit, only to discover that the greater part of it had been stolen. I rushed madly around trying to locate it. When I came back to what had been left I found still more gone; flone with the first lot, as had also my native peons, who had most inconsiderately forgotten to either rebate advance charges on what was not there to convey across, nor on what was there and which they did not carry to Panama for me. I never discovered waht became of either goods or carriers.

I found others were having the same experience. We pooled our troubles, arranged for guards and then went gunning for more carriers. When we appeared in force we were able to reach terms much more quickly. The peon may have started out as an Honest Injun, but he had learned better before we hit the Isthmus. We had to pay half down, then we rounded them up and took them to our stuff. All went well until we told them to [illegible] up the hill aways came the sound of screaming and fighting. Every peon started for the sound. A Yankee in our crowd saw through it first, jumped in front of the black devils, leveled his pistol and halted them on the spot. They protested, begged, pleaded, shed tears and wailed. We were hardboiled. We swung our Bowie knives around to the front, pistols in hand, and boots ready to land where nature had placed the most dark meat.

Finally they gave in, sullenly, doggedly, and with most malicious glares in our direction. As they loaded us into the old boats we were regaled with bursts of laughter. We looked up the hillside. The late fighters were doubled up with mirth as they watched the unsuccessful bluffers puff under our heavy loads of provisions.

Man wants but little here below, but on the Isthmus he wants even less. As I saw the worry and trouble that assailed the owners of much baggage and equipment I began to thank the man who robbed me.

Where before I had lamented the loss of my freight I now actually rejoiced, for it would have been impossible to have gotten it all across, and if I had, would have been unable to have taken it north with me.

So I sat back and laughed as I thought of how much I was saving by having lost so much.

The trip up the Charges was one long to be remembered. The scenery must have been magnificent, but when you attempt to see it through swarms of mosquitos so thick that your hand is all mushy with their battered carcasses every time you make a swat at the other beauties of nature.

Still, I remember very vividly the countless parrots, monkeys, pigeons, toucaans, wild turkeys and alligators. The trees and vines were enormous, some festoons extending several hundred feet.

We were glad to get to Gorgona. It contained about eight hundred people. We noticed that these natives in a few cases had taken another step towards civilization. Some had a string of beads on. A few, still more enlightened, had draped a half yard of cloth around their anatomy.

"We paid for transportation we cheerfully refused to use. Riding mule back under a torrid sun at the Isthmus in 1849 was no joke."
—(From an illustration published in 1850).

From Gorgona it was but 25 miles to Panama, and on land at that. It sounded particularly good to Bill and me. We were tired of the hot, musty, muggy water, with its poisonous, malamic vapor that hung like a shroud over everything at times.

When we arose the next morning we found that our carriers had decided not to attempt to earn that other portion of their wages. So Bill and I started out to hunt up some horses to take us across the mountain. But those mules and horses were such little, scrawny, thin and miserably weak animals that we despaired until a Mexican told us that any peon could carry more than their mules, and this I found to be true, for they carried loads of two hundred pounds or more with ease over the narrow, rocky road that we Americans could scarcely travel without any pack.

Their method of carrying these weights was by means of a crude frame of wooden slats to which they affixed a piece of sailcloth to form loops through which they slipped their arms. Another wide band of canvas went around the forehead and was attached to the top of the frame.

[illegible] carrier that when it is lifted to their backs the top of the trunk or barrel rises far above their head, while the bottom rests on their shoulder blades. It looks easy. I tried it once, but did not seem to get the combination somehow. I merely pitched headfirst to the ground.

We had two mules to carry us. We would really have preferred to have walked across, but the fear of deadly snakes, tarantulas, scorpions and lizards induced us to ride the razorback mules that they furnished for the trip.

It is rather a pleasant ride across, in spots. Where those spots aren't is where you get your experiences.

Two miles west of Gorgona you enter a mule path running through a dense forest, the branches interlacing overhead, forming an arbor so dense as to exclude the sun. It was shady but terrifically hot and humid in the dense undergrowth on all sides.

We came to a number of gullies in the sides of the mountain, just wide enough at their bottom to admit a horse and its rider. Looking up you find yourself in a chasm with perpendicular sides twenty or thirty feet high into which the sun has never shown.

When we came to these Bill would halt the procession, then let out a warwhoop and wait. If no answer came he gave another. If that brought forth no reply we proceeded to pass through, otherwise we waited until the other parties emerged.

In places the steep pitches and narrow passes, with the sticky adobe that stuck like molten wax to everything, combined with the intense, moist heat, had its effect upon our animals as it had had upon scores of others, whose bloat[illegible] road, a gruesome feast for hundreds of immense turkey buzzards that hovered over them.

To still more arouse our fears was the constant thought that possibly we might furnish the motif for one of those little Spanish shrines that dotted the trail from Gorgona to Panama, eloquent souvenirs of the bloody work of the local bandits. As we passed some of them our peons seemed to take a devilish delight in drawing their fingers across their throat, gurgling a moment, then letting their head fall loosely to one side. They uttered no word, but they conveyed the idea without trouble.

We came to many places filled with mud and water. Bill attempted to cross one of these little quagmires. He was heavier than me, his animal was lighter. I had made the bank in safety, but with considerable difficulty.

Bill's little mule got his front feet up on solid ground. Then he stuck. He was too weak to extricate his hind feet. Bill held on tight, and he held the reins still tighter. It was too much for Jenny. She just flopped right over backwards and buried old Bill deep in the mud, the mule on top. We rushed to his rescue.

Loud sulphurous words gurgled up through that mud. We knew Bill's head was under at that point. We were convinced of it when we ran our hand down and our fingers slipped into his mouth. We wallered around in that mess for five minutes before we got Bill up on his feet. He spouted like a whale as he let loose his vocabulary. We had to laugh, even the peons. He tried to kick the mule. That mud was slippery and he sat down in it again.

There was no water handy, nothing but the adobe. We scraped ourselves as best we could; tried to [illegible] like a boy off the greased pig. Bill decided to walk. So did I.

Somehow the humor died out of the situation as we trudged along through that hot, humid sun. Then that mud began to bake. If you think that adobe does not shrink when it dries, just try plastering some on your face and sit out in the sun until it dries. Then imagine yourself coated with it from your ears to your toes.

As it dried it cracked, until Bill looked like a gigantic snapping turtle, with all the snap still in action.

Misery likes company, but company does not always like misery. As we went along we overtook many others likewise with an adobe veneer. At first they glared at one another, then they began to laugh and pass various remarks about the clinging memories of the soil.

Suddenly we turn a bend in the trail and we see Panama some three miles in the distance, with the towers of the old cathedral glistening in the sun. Soon we are on a road paved with cobblestones, the work of convicts who are still brought out in chaingangs. Within a mile of town we passed the great stone bridge, with but one arch. Then comes a stone tower surmounted by a cross. In the suburbs of Panama there are many costly residences, with beautiful gardens.

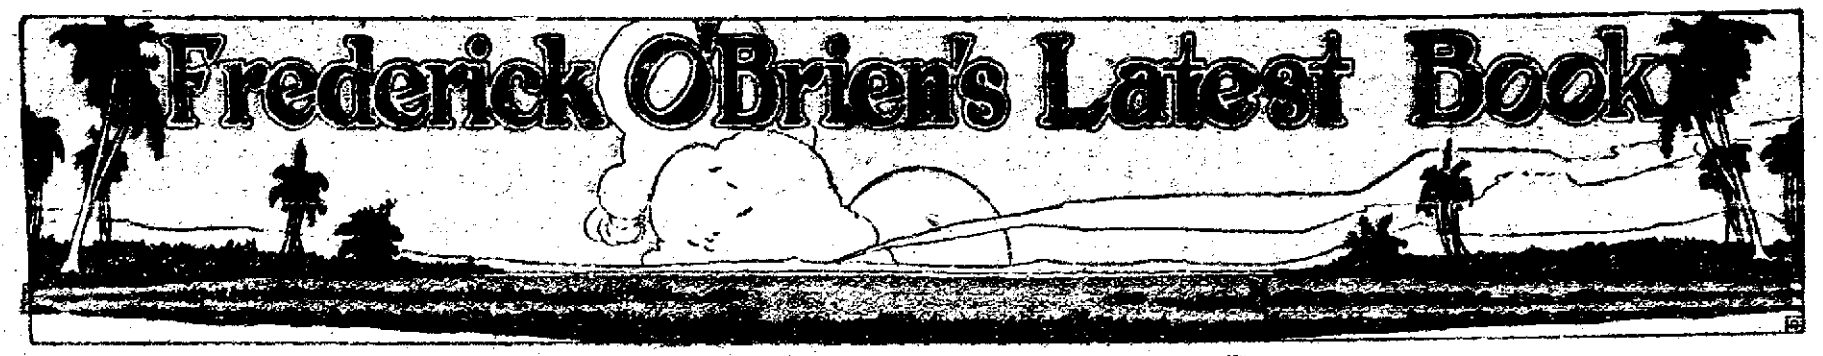

We passed between two high walls to the moat surrounding the city, and on through the gate. We would have been denied admittance to any city in our own country, but they had become used to seeing mud baked tourists of late. We immediately went to a hotel and proceeded to get rid of our overcoating, had supper and went to bed.

That is, some of us did. Evidently Bill didn't, for about sunrise a native policeman came to my room and informed me that my brother was in jail for starting a row in a dance hall.

Bill looked like both the start and the finish when I saw him. He looked up dolefully at me and said, "Bob, ain't them Spanish girls hell!"

Frederick O'Brien's Latest Book

sprang after the nightmare. When I overtook him, he was standing at the foot of a lofty cocoanut-tree and shaking his fist at the object of his pursuit, which was climbing with unbelievable speed up the slippery gray trunk.

"I tciencl! It is the kaveu, that devil of the night who robs us of our cocoanuts while we sleep. But wait! I made a vow to destroy the next one I found thieving!"

Nohea went a hundred yards to where a banana plant was growing in earth brought from Tahiti. He gathered clay and leaves, and with painstaking effort fashioned a wreath of the mixture six inches wide and several feet in length. I stood in wonderment, guessing that he was making a charm to bring about the death of the despoiler of the groves.

Nohea took a length of coir, the rope the Paumotuans make of cocoanut-fiber—from the tree which feeds them, clothes them, and houses them—and, tying it into a girdle but little larger than the girth of the palym, put it about his wrists. The cocoanut-tree had, at regular intervals upon its trunk, projecting bands of its tough bark, and about thefirst of these about his head Nohea slipped the rope. He pulled himself up by it, and, clasping the tree with his legs, seized a higher holding-place. Thus he proceeded with ease until he had reached a point half-way of the lofty column. There he halted, and, taking from his shoulders his matted band, he plastered it firmly around the trunk.

He then slipped to the ground. I was as puzzled as a boy who was told at sailing that the ship was weighing its anchor, and saw no scale.

"That will do for him," said Nohea, "as the reef shatters the canoe when the steersman fails to find the pass."

He returned to the fire, and soon we were absorbed in the pleasant processes of supper. We lived simply, becoming near-to-nature folk, but we had plenty. First, we ate popo, tiny fish we had snared in our traps, and which we swallowed raw, after a soaking in the juice of limes. With our bonito steak we had broiled cocoanut-meat, and for drink we opened the wondrous chalices of the green nuts and enjoyed the cool wine. There was no breadfruit, for these islands of stone afforded no nourishment to such delicate and rich plants. But we had ship's biscuit from the schooner, and for dessert a pot of loganberry jam. Nohea, his stomach full, sat contemplatively on his haunches. Now and then he cocked his ear toward the cocoanut-grove, but he said nothing. The crown of the tree in which the giant crustacean had vanished was lost in the gloom of night. A slight breeze sprang up from the distance toward the Land of the War Fleet, and pandanus and miki-miki bushes nodded and gave forth little noises as their leaves and branches rubbed together.

Over all was the atmosphere of mystic aloofness which the white feels so keenly in these far-away dots—the utter difference of scene and incident from the accustomed one of the home land. I mused about my own future in these little known tropics—

Nohea cautiously raised himself to his feet, and, motioning me to be silent, directed my attention to the tree up which had gone the ugly marauder an hour before. We heard plainly a grating, incisive noise, and in a moment a huge cocoanut fell from among the swaying leaves to the earth.

A smothered exclamation of fury broke from the Paumotuan, but he made no step and continued pointing at the palm. Then I heard a scratching, and peering through the darkness with the aid of my electric torch, I saw the colossal crab coming down the trunk. He held on to the slippery bark by and sharp points of his walking legs, and backwardly descended with extreme care.

Nohea watched intently as the animal neared the girdle of clay and leaves. I noted his excitement, but still could not resolve his plan. It flashed upon me as its success was established in an instant of action.

The crab, reaching the clay, moved less carefully, and suddenly, to my astonishment, let go his hold, and with claws wildly beating the air, whirled downward from the height of forty feet, crashing on the rocks at the foot of the tree. In a second Nohea was upon him with a club of purau wood. But there was no need for further punishment. The drop had caused instant death. The immense shell was smashed and the monster lay inert upon the coral stones.

The diver sprang in the air and clapped his hands rapidly, as might a winning bettor at a prize-fight.

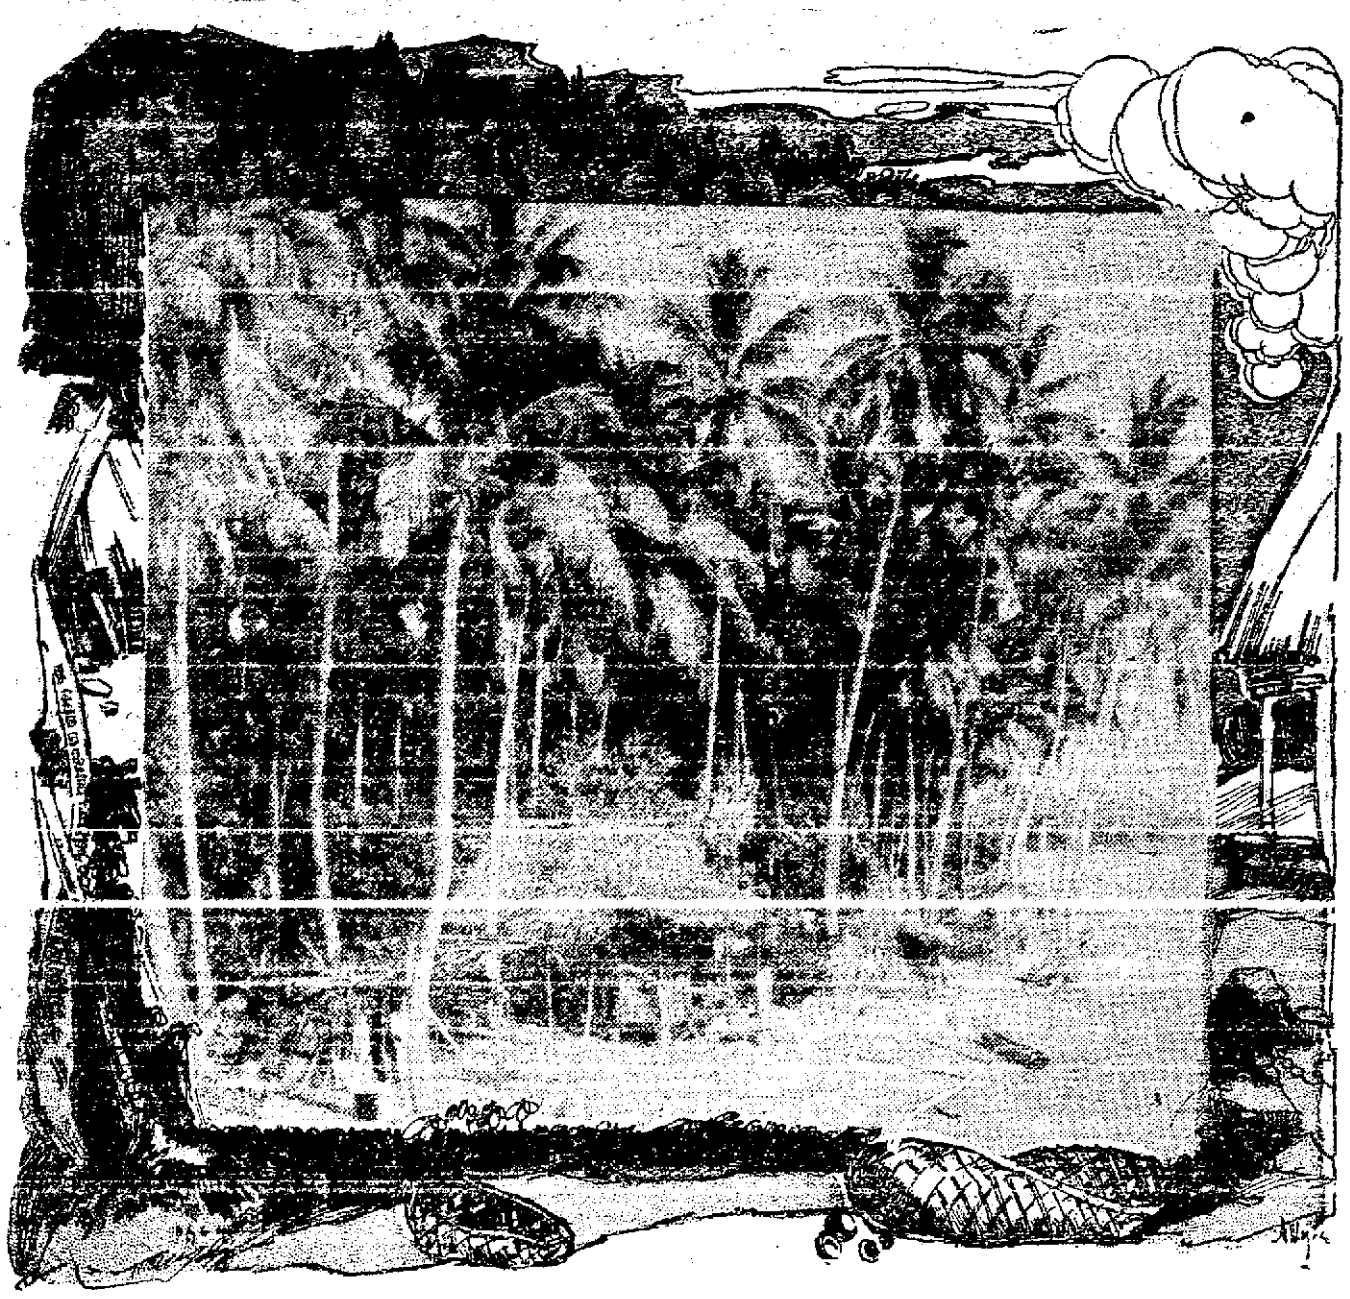

"The fool!" he said. "He has no brains—no bowels of wisdom. He thought the clay was the bottom, and that he was already with the nut he had robbed me of, and which he could not open and eat. Many I have killed like that one, but it takes time. I have had such a thief steal my pareu for his house, and a bottle of kerosene for mere mischief. We will eat the flesh of this one's legs, and I will melt his fat against the rahui when I might have rheumatism."

Nohea showed me a great mass of blue fat under the kaveu's tail, and from this he boiled down a quart of the finest oil. It was not only a specific for rheumatism but the best possible lubricant for sewing-machines and clocks, he said. He put some of the oil in the sun, and when thickened it made butter, though not with a milky taste.

This thievish crab seemed marked by his star—doubtless of the Cancer of constellation—to play a deceptive part in the crustacean world, for not only had he practically abandoned the water as his element, learned to climb trees, and to eat food utterly foreign to his natural appetite, but he had a habit of hiding his tail when the rest of his body was in full view. He would stick it in any convenient hole, under a log, or even in the cocoanut shell he had emptied. He was over-conscious and seemingly ashamed of it, like an awkward man of his hands at a wedding.

The kaveu's descent from the hermit-crab family might explain his tail-concealment custom, for the hermit concealed his entire body in a borrowed shell, and so, perhaps, the robber-baron was but showing an atavistic remnant of the disguise instinct. The whole crab tribe seemed tainted with this fear of being merely themselves. Many of them picked up a piece of seaweed and stuck it on their projecting curved bristles, and let it grow as a kind of permanent bonnet. Others took pieces of live sponge, and fastened them to hooks on their backs. One clever chap stitched seaweed threads together to form a tube, and then crawled into it. And one masonic crab mixed a sandy cement and plastered its back with it until it looked like the floor of a [illegible]

These specious masqueraders selected colors, too, to suit their background, and the seaweed or sponge must match the environment or be rejected. Older and hardened backsliders invited oysters and other mollusks and worms that live in limestone pipes to dwell on their shells, and move about with them. I was convinced that these low-in-the-scale beings knew more about their environment, and practiced "safety first" more assidiously, than did man himself. The biggest robber-crab in the Takaroa groves could not have got a humble hermit brother to volunteer to go to war against a crab colony, or risk his life to

In carrying a cocoanut, the robber crab held it under some of its walking legs, and retired, raised high on the tips of its other members a foot from the ground. Its body measured two feet long by eighteen inches wide. It did not use its claws in ascending the tree, but clung with the sharp points of its legs; and I saw it go up steep rocks upon these. The remarkable strength of this mollusk was proved when one was placed in an ordinary tin cracker-box, which it could not take hold of, and a few hours later had twisted off the lid. Nohea said they were not easy to trap, and that more than once a Paumotuan, who had climbed a tree in the night to procure nuts, to his great horror had had his hair seized by a crab. He said that usually they bit off from six to ten nuts upon each ascent of a palm.

"The kaveu likes to eat the young turtles when they are hatched and making their first journey to the water," Nohea informed me. "The crab, knowing where the eggs are buried, watches them as they mature in the sand."

I told Nohea of the crabs I had seen in Japanese waters, some stretching seven or eight feet, and another which bore a human face upon its back. To see one of the latter crawling upon the sand was to see what apparently was a human mask moving across the beach. The Japanese said that these crabs were never known until after a fleet of pirates had been destroyed, and the leading villains beheaded upon the sea-shore.

Against the rat, which was perhaps a worse enemy of the beneficent cocoanut than the crab, my friend Nohea had no safeguard. He could not afford to encircle his trees with bands of tin, as did cor[illegible] of Tahiti, but he told me, with great appreciation, the story of Willi, the clever American dentist, and his atoll of Tetiaroa, near Tahiti. Once it was the resort of the kings and aristocracy of Tahiti, the sanatorium to which they went when jaded, or wounded in war or sport, and to which the belles retired to whiten their complexion by wearing off the sunburn in the shade of the banyans and cocoanuts. It was famed in the annals of the Ariol, the ancient minstrels of Tahiti, as a scene of orgiastic dances.

"The atoll of Tetiaroa," said Nohea, "had always many cocoanut-trees. The lagoon is as rich in fish as is Takaroa. Never had many people lived there, for it was tabu, and only for the Arii, the nobles, and the Arioi. But now it belongs to the man who takes away teeth from the head, and who hammers gold upon those that remain."

The master diver spun his tale vividly but slowly. Often he repeated the same statement, for the Paumotuan speech, like that of all Polynesia, is a picture language, and iteration and harping is the soul of it, as of the ancient Hebrew chronicles.

Upon my mat and gazing into the expressive eyes of the diver, I recalled what I myself had been told by the owner of Tetiaroa, and, with Nohea's story, pieced together the facts.

Dr. Walter Johnstone Williams, the dentist of Tahiti for twenty years, had, as related Nohea, taken away the teeth of the South Sea Islanders or gilded those which remained. They love those shiny, precious-metal teeth, these children of the tropics, and would give almost anything to gain the golden smile they admired. So when the royal family of Tahiti fell in debt to Dr. Williams, they bartered, in exchange for fillings and pullings, facings and bridges, and for other good and sufficient consideration, the wondrous atoll of Tetiaroa. Upon it the shrewd and skillful dentist found tens of thousands of cocoanut-palms which had grown as volunteers in the generous way of tropic verdure, and he himself planted tens of thousands more in order to increase the copra crop. He found a plague of rats, and, being unwilling to expend the large sum that would be needed for the metal bands which would frustrate the rats, he longed for a Pied Piper to lead the pests into the sea. But he bethought himself of the proverbial appetite of the domestic cat for the rat, and, lacking a magic whistler, he advertised for cats, offering to pay a franc for each one brought to his house by the Papeete quay. He had copies of his advertisement struck off on the press and posted upon the trees in and about Papeete, as was the custom.

The result was a flood, a deluge, [illegible] was as eager as his American brother to earn a few coins to spent on luxuries; and so the cats, much like our own in appearance except for their tails, which were curved like a question-mark, came in bags, in boxes, and in nets, while others were personally conducted, yowling, in the arms of th[illegible] Tahitian youth.

Dentist Williams had not expected so many, and had much trouble in finding places for them to reside until he could remove them to Tetiaroa.

A Barefoot Dance In Church

Former Alameda Pastor Creates Sensation by Introducing Young Women as Medium for Interpretation of Sermons; Their Steps Keep Pace With Hymns of Church Service

By Frank R. Schumann.

NEW YORK is still talking about the former Alameda pastor who has introduced barefoot dancing in his New York church.

Dr. William Guthrie, for a number of years rector of the Christ Episcopal church of Alameda, a short time ago set religious circles agog by having his sermon on the Annunciation illustrated by a group of dancing girls in the famous and ancient St. Marks-in-the-Bouwerie.

Dr. Guthrie was delivering a sermon on the Annunciation at the evening service when the lights in the church were slowly dimmed. Suddenly the beam of a spotlight was centered upon the sanctuary and while the congregation sat in amazement and wonderment, some so pleased that they were carried away by the effect, others so shocked that they were speechless, a bevy of beautiful dancing girls appeared one at a time from behind the sanctuary and swung into the rhythm of an interpretative dance.

They were clothed in loose flowing gowns which suggested the filmy robes of the ancient Greek dancers, even though they did not exactly copy them. Their feet were bare, and, unhampered by clinging garments, the girls moved forward in graceful rhythm and interpreted the sermon which the pastor had just delivered from the pulpit.

The spotlight followed the dancers and different lighting effects showed them off to advantage, which a number of those familiar with the staging of scenes in theaters said could not have been done better had they been aided by the most skilled artists in lighting and staging.

The dramatic effect of the sermon interrupted by this scene may have had some influence upon their interpretations of the scene, but the fact remains that it had a startling result.

The pastor continued his sermon, the girls punctuated his points with dramatic movements, while the audience sat spellbound. A strange peacefulness seemed to permeate the entire atmosphere, similar to the calm which almost always precedes a storm.

The sermon was nearing its end, the girls formed the last figure and then disappeared behind the sanctuary, while the pastor, gathering up the loose ends of the sermon, brought it to a close. The service was completed with no other mention being made of the unusual scene just enacted.

Then the rector went to the front of the church to shake hands, as is the custom, with the congregation passing out.

The comments were many and varied. Some declared that the dancing girls were out of place in a church. Others declared that as dancing was originally a symbol of the church it should be restored to its rightful and one-time place. A sermon should be a sermon, with the threat of brimstone and damnation ever to the front, some asserted, while others congratulated the rector for having illustrated his discourse in such a beautiful and effective way.

The young women who interpreted the dance for Dr. Guthrie were not what is generally termed as professional dancers, as they were the daughters of members of the congregation. Still they were dancing girls in every sense of the word. They practiced their dance under the supervision of Dr. Guthrie himself, and their participation was in the same spirit as that which actuates the personnel of the Passion Play.

[illegible] rector of the church in Alameda, which was formerly a charge of Dr. Guthrie, thinks the innovation in the New York church justified. He says:

"Dr. Guthrie is doing a unique work in New York, first of all because of the fact that the former constituency of St. Marks-in-the-Bouweue—wealthy New York people—have left this vicinity and moved further up town, leaving this [illegible] therefore free to launch out in new channels of Christian work and experiment.

"In the second place, while Dr. Guthrie has endeavored to minister to the teeming population of foreign born people who crowd the tenements of this East Side district, he has also endeavored to reach the large colony of artists, literary people and the thousands of others who devote themselves to the aesthetic. The rector of St. Marks is himself a poet. His is distinctly the artist's soul and he has the temperament of the artist. One of his great passions is to interpret Christ to this large group of kindred spirits among whom he lives. Therefore, with the opportunity to do so and the inclination, it is not suprising to find Dr. Guthrie reaching out for this large unshepherded flock.

"His adaptation of the service of the church in favor of a presentation of religious truth which will make a ready appeal to the artistic nature is dictated by neither a craving for sensationalism nor a desire to be irreverent, but by a longing to help.

"One should remember that it is not so many hundreds of years ago that every parish church and cathedral in Europe was the scene of every phase of social and community endeavor, including the presentation of the mystery and miracle plays so popular at that [illegible]."

An Oakland minister in commending the step taken by Dr. Guthrie stated that dancing must be classed among the fine arts when it is properly developed, and as such it should take its place alongside good music and literature in the display of the emotions during religious worship.

Another Oakland minister in a recent sermon from the pulpit censured the church for telling what [illegible] of amusement and then failing to provide them with recreation.

"There is no more harm in seeing a good moving picture than in reading a good book, and there is no more harm in dancing, as such, than in any other kind of amusement," this speaker declared.

"The play instinct is just as natural, and just as holy, as any other instinct. People will have their good times and it is perfectly right that they should.

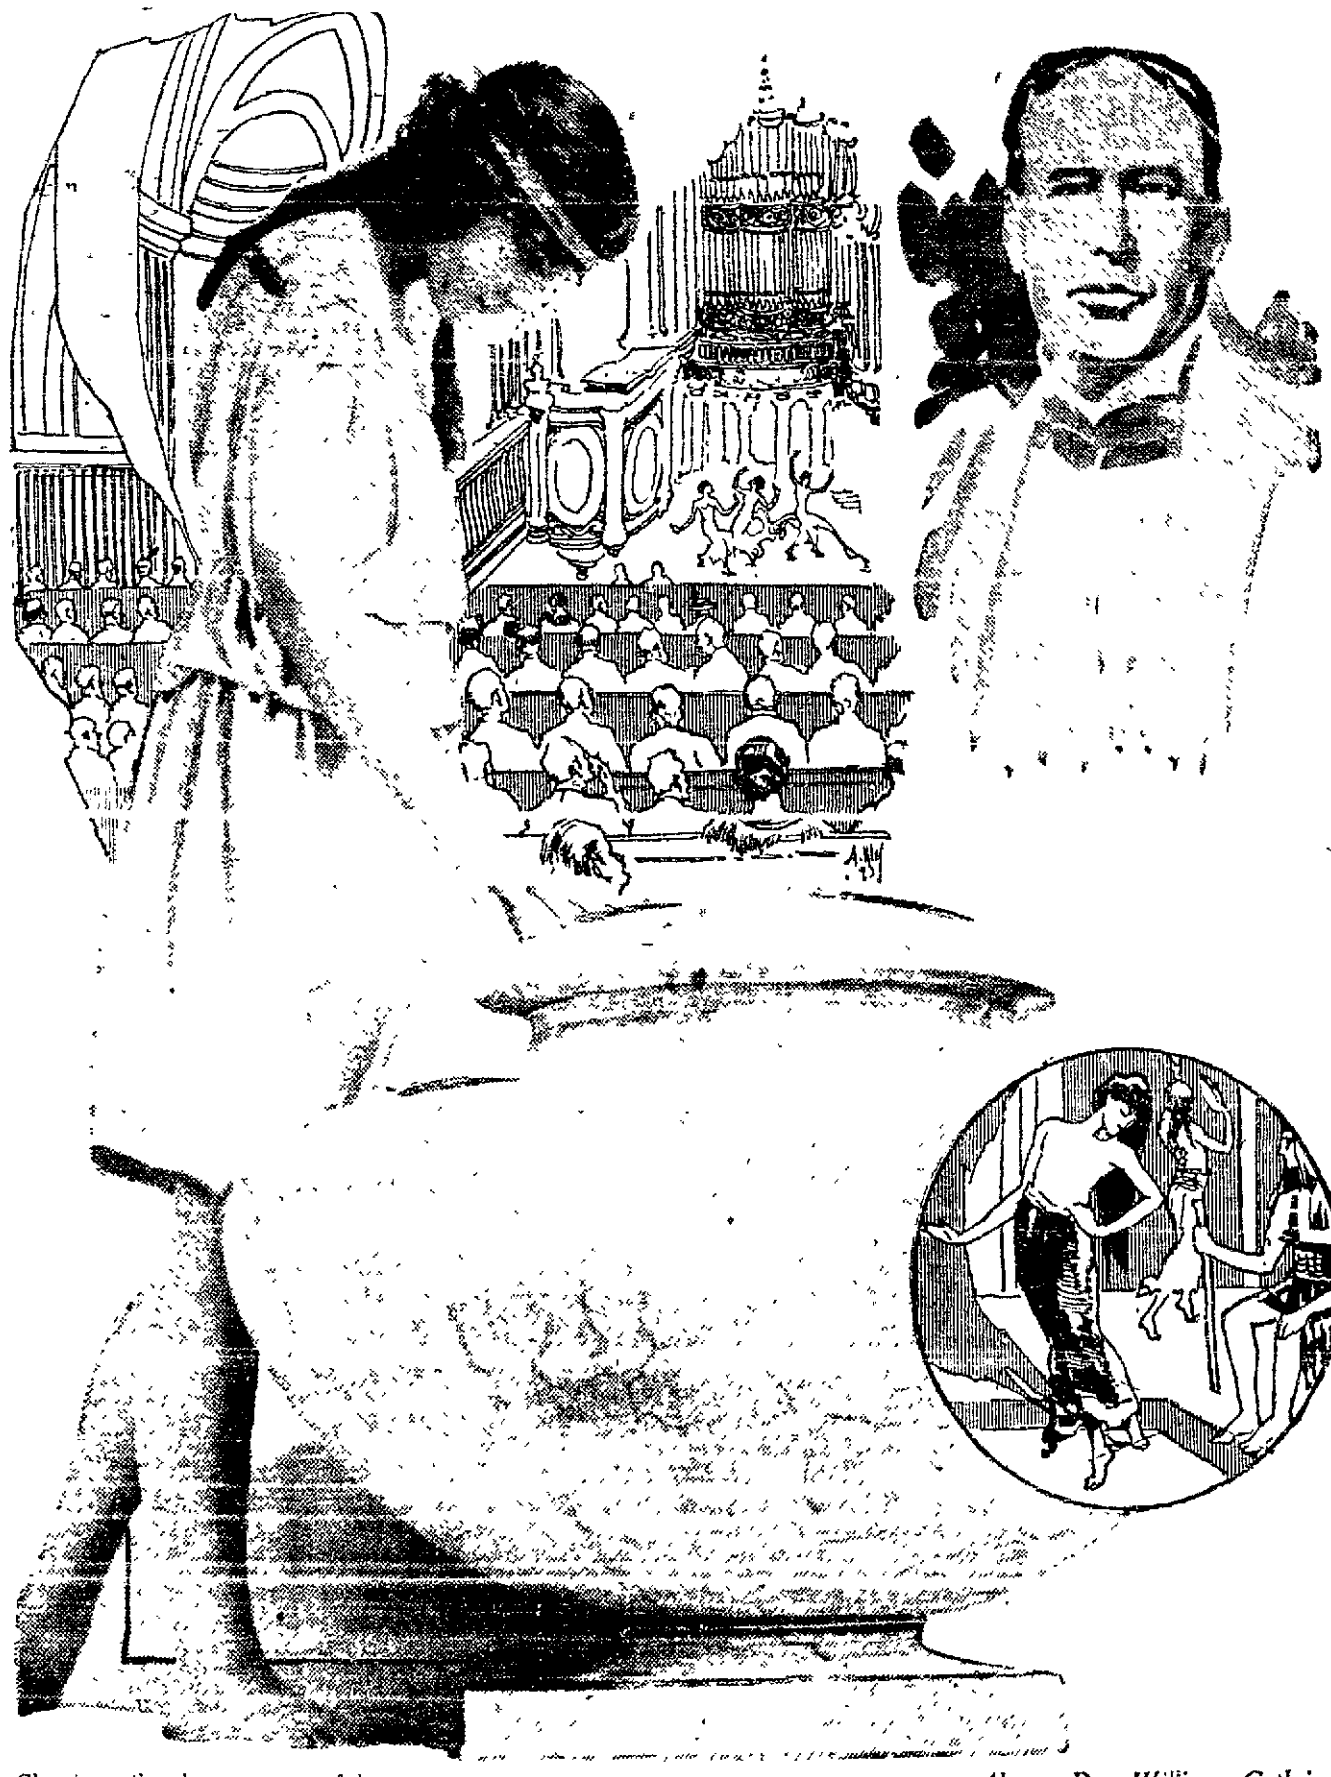

Two evangelists who were in Oakland, however, do not seem to hold the same opinions. One of them, who was heard by tens of thousands, declared that every stage where dancing was permitted and every dance hall floor was built over pitfalls and brimstone of Hades and that the devil and his henchmen stood at hand to open the trapdoors which were numerous on the dancing floor and drop their victims through.

The other evangelist, who devoted several of his meetings to the dance question, declared it to be immoral, indecent and a menace to health, morals and spirituality. Here's what he said about it at one of the meetings:

"Some tell me they dance to become graceful. Yes, I know some folks who are growing in grace [illegible] Tenten, Oakland dancing circles, you're outclassed. Any of the flat-footed savages of the South Sea Islands has you beat in your art. I would sooner have my daughter wabble like a hippopotamus than to have her risk her honor on the dance floor to become 'graceful.' I would sooner have her in a slimy dungeon, with foul air, filled with scorpions, lizards, toads and snakes, than to have her associate with the average cigarette-sucking, peanut-brained, spider-legged dancing dudes comes to call on my daughter I'll introduce my shoemaker to his tailor!"

"Dr. Guthrie is no lover of the infamous. He is an earnest searcher after the truth. He is not [illegible] to lasciviousness or lewdness, but he is trying to be all things to all people, as a great apostle did before him.

"Because in the interests of truth he is treading the path of the unusual, he must tread it alone, and he will undoubtedly realize the bitterness of misunderstanding on his lonely way."

Above, Dr. William Guthrie, who introduces barefoot dancing in church; type of Grecian dancer and modern young man whom dances are expected to win for the church.

Geraldine on Bad Tempers

Highly Charged Personalities Often Let Off Steam via Anger Route, But They Suffer as Result, Wasting Themselves, Making Themselves Unpopular in Every Way

I'M going talk on one of the oldest subjects in the world—Bad Tempers. It is such an old subject and we are so used to seeing it in operation that we have forgotten its sinister significance. Yet nine-tenths of our disasters, domestic and national, are due to someone's Bad Temper—someone's inability to carry on sanely and cheerfully under strain.

Bad Temper in a person acts exactly like bad tempering in steel. You may not detect the weakness under ordinary usage, but when most you need its service, the steel—or the person—will fail you. We have all been failed by someone, and we have all failed someone in our turn. So it seems to me that a few traffic rules on the subject from a chronic offender won't come amiss. Le's go!

It's Plain Cussed

I have a Bad Temper. There's nothing decorative or distinguished about my Bad Temper. It's plain cussed and its reactions are most inartistic. I get red and gobble and my hair comes down. I say foolish and unkind things. I say them as loudly as possible and with absolutely no regard for the truth. Then I go off and get sorry for myself and cry until my nose looks like a new species of purple mushroom.

I am giving you these details thus frankly because it is quite possible that you, too, have a Bad Temper quite like unto mine, and it may interest you to know how I and my Bad Temper get on together. For we do get on—now. For five years my temper has stayed in its kennel where all snapping dogs should stay. I cannot quite get rid of it, but I am determined that it shall no longer bother me or those around me. Here's how I managed.

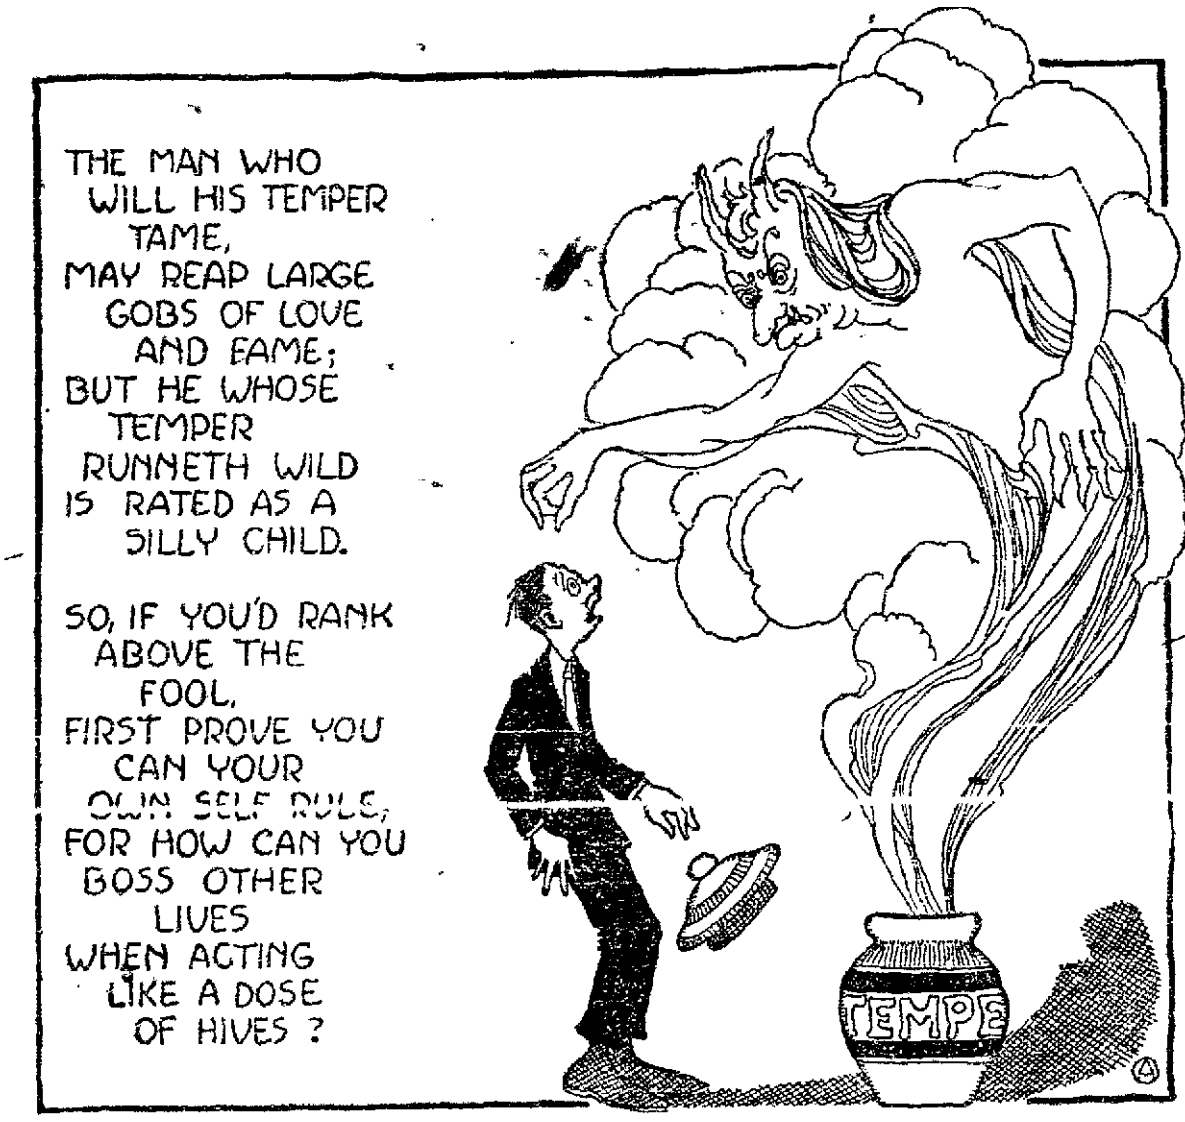

My Bad Temper began when I was little and dimpled and wore curls. Everyone thought it was so cunning. I thought so, too. I would still be thinking so only unfortunately, when I began to grow lean and lumpy and had to buy my marcels, my audience ceased to twitter with delight over my cute little tantrums. Nor did they try to hide their change of feeling. In word rude but forceful they told me that I was a plaindarnednuisance.

They not only called me a Plaindarnednuisance when I was mad, but they increasingly failed to appreciate me when I wasn't mad, which hurt worse. Now I, like all other humans, felt in my heart that I was an Extraordinary Being, with an unusual capacity for greatness and a very great need for love and admiration. I wasn't particularly conceited—simply normal. We all feel that way about ourselves. I longed to have people depend upon me, and respect my opinions. I wanted to be a Power. But oddly enough, no one seemed to share my impression of myself. They loved me, they were good to me, but when I was mentioned they simply smiled and said—"Yes, isn't she a dear girl. So bright and talented but——" They always stopped with the "but." You knew at once that my intelligence had about as much standing with them as a fish worm's.

Setting a Standard.

It was all because of that Bad Temper. I wanted them to regard it as a trivial idiosyncrasy—the inevitable accompaniment of a sensitive, high strung, near-genius brain. But nothing doing! They saw the Bad Temper fast enough, but they entirely overlooked all that stuff about my brain. They were regular card files when it came to accumulating data about my mean disposition. If the Recording Angel [illegible] can find a perfect understudy in any one of my friends. They remembered every last squeak and squawk of my ravings, and they judged all my other actions by those displays of Bad Temper.

Now, I didn't really want to get rid of my Bad Temper. It had been a pretty neat graft in the past. But what's the use of being an expert in any line if you're not appreciated? So I began looking tle pet. Straightway I made some interesting discoveries.

A very wise psychologist had said that the way you feel inside is largely dependent upon the way you act outside. For instance, the more I shouted and sneered and wept and ate the worse grew my inward condition until the works just naturally ran down from exhaustion. But if I resolutely kept my voice low, even and, if possible, entirely inaudible, I cooled off much more rapidly and the other chap was forced to carry all the responsibility for the crime.

That was the theory. I tried it. It worked. Not, mind you, that I've ever succeeded in feeling like a vanilla wafer when I'm mad. As a heart panteth for the cooling brook, so pant I for murder when I'm riled, which is frequent. But I have at last found the way to conceal my feelings. I screw on one of those fire-proof grins, put my vocal apparatus in cold storage and, if possible, remove myself bodily from the front line trenches. The consequence is that everyone thinks I have a heavenly disposition and whenever there's any pie to be cut I always get a large and juicy slice. Whereas, if they knew how I really feel inside they'd call for the police.

You Waste Yourself.

There's another advantage to this scheme. You not only gain an audience, you gain more self. Bad Tempers involve a lot of energy. They're pretty apt to belong to highly charged people and that's one way of letting off steam. But if you let off steam in that way you get no return for the outlay, save unpopularity. You waste yourself as well as get yourself in wrong. Then, when you have nothing to meet it with, you either blow up or go limp.

But if you control that Bad Temper, you save that potential energy. It's a lot of energy, too. Bad Tempered people are generally correct in thinking they have more fizz than other folks. Their mistake lies in doing nothing useful with that fizz. Control that fizz, and you'll be amazed at the record you can make with your bridled power.

That's the story of my Bad Temper. I'm still far from a Domestic Treasure or an Office Blessing. Even though I have learned the power of silence, I can still sling a nasty look that doesn't endear me to the commonwealth. But in general I'm a lot easier to live with [illegible] look at in moments of stress. I'm not going to advise you to follow my example. If you're not anxious enough to do it without my urging, no words of mine can help you. But, take it from me, Friend, it pays. And if you think I'm enthusiastic when I utter those words, you just ought to hear my long-suffering family!

"Wanderer" heaved a gass bomb at "modern women" in general and Geraldine in particular. His girl had jilted him. Therefore the world was going to the dogs and it was all because of suffrage and "equal rights." Wanderer's letters were rather incoherent and would have been somewhat pitiful if he had not attacked women in the most outrageously insulting terms. Having done so he sought a coward's refuge in the statement that he was a wounded ex-soldier, and still a great sufferer. This both prevented retort and gained him a large audience of sentimental sisters. By the same token, Jerry made herself somewhat unpopular by insisting that wounds and service stripes in no way excused intolerance and boorishness. And, despite the following protest, I still insist that Wanderer's attack was unjustified and most contemptible.

"Geraldine:

"I have just read your article and 'Wanderer's' letter, and I agree with him perfectly. Probably the girl who won his heart was one who believed 'Off with the old, on with the new' a good creed. If we women were really equalized with the men, what a mess this world would be! Equal rights! There cannot be such a thing—not with 'sob stuff' and persons deploring the discourtesy and impoliteness of the male to female. If a man really treated women as one of his fellowmen there would arise a howl or wail to shame the babble of voices of the tower spoken off in the Old Testament. A woman should be taxed as a man is and all opposition to punishment, prison sentences put down if we women really want to play fair in this equal rights game.

Unworthy Women.

"I have just thought that perhaps the girl didn't want to marry the 'Wanderer' because he expected a home and a couple of kiddies to work and live for. A woman going through this world, marrying a man and having no children to care for or carry on the later generations, is unworthy of any consideration of a lady or woman. She is [illegible] street, though she has gone before a judge or county clerk and raised her right hand and sworn to love, honor, cherish and obey (many don't add the last), and she has raised her hand probably, or thought in secret, at least other oaths and 'By Gods' and 'I swears' every day of her life, so one more oath doesn't worry her.

"I'm a woman. I have two children. I am happy to know I am [illegible] picked by a regular 'he man' to keep his home, return his love, bear his children and share his luck. He's an ex-service man.

"Perhaps I am a little old fashioned, but if a woman smokes—let her smoke. If she dresses extreme—let her do so. She's looking for equality—let her have it in all sense and see what happens. 'Oh, the brutes of men!' Poor little unprotected, betrayed girls and women! They bring it on themselves.

"I am not so bad looking or poorly dressed but what I could go along the street and have a few males turn their head for a second look or 'pick up' a 'swell guy' and get a good time, 'swell feed' and present out of him and perhaps get 'half stewed' and not know what happens to me. There are many who do it. All will be well, but let it so come about that they are 'betrayed,' as everyone says, then the howl goes up. Otherwise it goes on and on.

"Good night, Geraldine. Think kindly of me. I'm for FULL equality or none at all.

"Tell Wanderer it was worth $150 to lose her and find out ahead of time."

'MARIE.'

Geraldine Says—

That's an amazing letter, to be written by an American mother in the year 1923, isn't it! An American mother who argues vehemently against "equal rights" and thinks evil of the "equal righter," and yet is absolutely ignorant of what it's all about. No, I'm not going to roast Marie. I like her. She loves those babies and that husband of hers, and she honestly wants to be the best little mother and wife in the world. But she's the unconscious victim of ignorance and prejudice. I'm going to tell her a few basic facts—then perhaps she won't regard so lightly this "new freedom" which has proved such a blessing to her sex.

So you think "women should be taxed as men"? But they are, Marie. Where have you been living all this time, girl? They pay property tax, income tax, personal tax, just as [illegible] and on exactly the same scale. When the woman is married, her husband pays for both, of course, if the property is all in his name. But she is nevertheless paying her share, as such community property is half hers and all expenditures are shared by her as well as the husband.

There is no longer any exemption for sex before the law in the United States. Women must still battle against entrenched prejudice and unjust custom, but I assure you these prejudices and customs work

[illegible] there has been a violent opposition to the execution of women long before suffrage came into effect. This was not based on chivalry but simply on the fact that the death of a woman was more directly harmful to the next generation than the death of a man. The race may be perpetuated with but few fathers, but the death of a potential mother means an irremediable loss in population. Upon such argument was the opposition to the execution of women based. This opposition is now spreading to the execution of men, for we are coming to feel that all life is sacred in itself, irrespective of its importance to the next generation. And women are now subject to the same penalties as men and carry the same responsibilities.

In the Old Days.

You know very little of the condition of women under equal suffrage, Marie. I wonder if you know anything of her terrible condition before suffrage came. I wonder if you know of the thousands of laws which gave her no rights as a citizen, as a wife, as a mother? Some of the laws are still on the books in various American states. Do you know that it was lawful for a husband to will away his unborn child in one of the eastern states? This was actually done within recent years. Do you know that in certain states today it is impossible for a woman to get divorce or any legal redress, even though her husband bring a mistress into the home and compel the wife to wait upon her? Do you know that, without this equal suffrage you condemn, husbands would own their wives and children as they own cattle and real estate, and that husbands and fathers could hunt fugitives wives or children as they would hunt escaping slaves and drag them back to any possible misery? No, I am not exaggerating. I am telling you of the conditions which actually prevail even today, and which prevailed throughout the United States until certain of the states began granting suffrage and offered a haven to abused wives and mothers.

You are happily married, tenderly protected. Are you so selfish, Marie, that you give no thought to the welfare of those women who have been less fortunate and have no protector unless the law protects them?

I cannot grow very angry over your picture of the results of "equality"—it is so evidently the vision of a happy, guarded and profoundly ignorant little woman. For your own sake you might well be spared enlightenment, but for your babies' sakes, you surely should learn the truth. It is not the trained, educated woman brought up to face equal responsibilities with men, and to demand equal rights, who is "betrayed" by men or who is a poor sport when she gets the worst of the deal. It is the untrained, undisciplined relic of the days when woman was a chattel and a parasite, who comes to such tragic ends. The young woman of today has other thoughts in her head beside sex relationships and the advantages of exploiting sex. She has other ways of getting on in life. She can use her brains and hands as well as any man, which is the main reason why small minded men like Wanderer fight her so bitterly.

As to the reason why Wanderer's fiancee broke with him, your letter shows some extremely feminine logic. You have no reason on earth to suppose she refused to have children or was in any way unworthy. You are simply establishing that as an imaginary premise and then erecting a very eloquent argument upon it. She probably broke her engagement because she didn't love or respect him, which is a sufficient reason for any girl to break her engagement.

The Missionaries.

The following letter is only indirectly addressed to me, yet I was moved to make some reply to it before I pass it on to the readers of this column and "Lady Lyon" to answer. W. S. P. is a Protestant minister residing in Oakland. He has contributed some extremely interesting letters to this column. A controversy has arisen concerning the work of missionaries. Such a controversy is very difficult to handle in this column, for it almost invariably is characterized by bitterness and intolerance on both sides. Yet a certain amount of healthy argument is good for all of us. Therefore I print both sides of the question, until either side gets too warm to handle. I am following this policy in the present missionary argument but I wish to make it plain that no propaganda, either for or against missionary work, is being attempted. I happen to be a church member myself, but life has taught me that there are just as many people sincerely following the precept of the Hebrew prophet, Christ Jesus, outside the churches as there are in the churches. So I most emphatically assert that all people are welcome to express their view in this column, provided they do so civilly, and that I respect all opinions which make for human progress, however they may be labeled.

"Geraldine:

"I think it is up to me to call for a show down. I am not writing this with any expectation that you will print it, but I should like to get results. First, there is 'Lady Lyon' attacking my letter on Christian missions among our Indians. Her reply is no reply. I deny and challenge every statement in it. I call on her to make good by giving facts, if she can. Her general assertions and wild charges prove nothing. Not a fact has she given to sustain them. I gave specific cases to show something of what thechurches and missionaries have done for the Indians, not one of which she has denied or can deny.

Helping the Indian.

"Her assertion as to our national ill-treatment of the Indians is a gross exaggeration. No other nation in America or on earth has done so much for the aborigines, or carried out so just and humane a policy toward them, as we have done. No doubt the Indians in many cases have been robbed and ill-treated, but by whom? Not by church people but by a very different class. Not by those 'Lady Lyon' denounces but by those she aligns herself with. The fact that the Indians roamed and hunted over the vast territory of this country gave them no title to the land.

"The land on this earth is for those who need it, who will cultivate and make the most of it. They fought and slaughtered and tortured the white settlers, to hold the privilege of roaming and hunting, but it was neither right nor possible that they should continue to hold it. I deny that they were driven into waste places and corralled on worthless land. They were driven westward because they would not yield. Rich tracts of land were set apart for them, as the whole of Indian Territory, but they refused to settle. Those who finally consented to do so secured peace, prospered, became civilized and educated, and in many cases became rich.

"It was necessary for the whites to protect their lives from savages, and also to subdue them by force when they persisted in fighting. Now many thousands of them are settled peacefully and doing well in South Dakota, Oklahoma and other sections. Those who are living in desert regions, as in Arizona, are right where they have always been, and are doing well with irrigation provided by the government, at the solicitation of Christian ministers.

"When the Indians of Arizona were robbed of the river water and left high and dry, it was a group of ministers, led by Dr. Spining, who went to Washington and induced the government to build a dam and irrigation plant for them. When have these ranters against the churches done anything of the kind for the Indians, the starving Chinese or any other suffering peoples?

Churches Help Indians.

"And it has always been the churches with their missionaries that have made possible the success of the government's policy. It is they who have helped the Indians most by teaching them to help themselves. As to the assertion that the missionaries had an eye for land, timber, water, and as they preached reached out for everything in sight,' there is no truth in it. If she can prove it, let her give the specific facts. Let her tell when, where and by what missionaries these things were done. I for one am curious to know. As to 'our stepping over the prostrate bodies at our door to help those outside,' why mince words at such a charge? It is but another of her false slanders. [illegible] 'missionaries teaching the Chinese how to eat rice,' the missionaries as agents of the churches in this country did the only thing required, which was to supply the rice, and thus saved thousands of lives. No missionaries have tried to teach the Indians to 'live on roots and nuts,' but have taught them to cultivate the land and to live on the proceeds.

"The Indians in this state are not the wards of the nation and if they have suffered it is the fault of the state. About the only people who have tried to help them are the people of the churches. I know something about the Pit River Indians, having married two couples of them at the mission maintained among them for years by the Presbyterian ladies. They seemed to be getting along, though the state ought long since to have set apart good lands for all its Indian wards. A difficulty in helping them has been their wandering habit and their aversion to work. And yet many thousands of them have settled down, and are working and supporting themselves.

"The Christian churches have always from colonial times worked for the Indians so far as they have become accessible, helping, teaching, uplifting and Christianizing them. And the good results are plainly apparent among thousands of them in various parts of the land. At the same time what have the non-Christian people done or tried to do for them? Let 'Lady Lyon' tell us what she has ever done for them any time or anywhere.

"W. S. P."

I am not abetting "Lady Lyon" in her argument, my friend, but I must remind you that you are exceeding the zeal of even our most patriotic historians in attempting to gloss over the conduct of the white man to the Indian. There is nothing disloyal in saying that that was a black chapter in American history or in stating that the early religious settlers committed many an atrocity in their fanatical belief that "the end justified the means." The adage that "might makes right" is a very old one, but it is an odd one to hear on the lips of a Christian minister. If the land belongs rightfully to those who can hold it, God have pity on the lesser, weaker nations of the world. It seems to me that some one they called the kaiser expressed opinions similar to that.

I sympathize with your defense of the members of your profession, my friend, and I truly give all honor to those who have tried to show forth in their lives the great principles of their leader. But may I gently remind you that an infinite amount of humanitarian work has been done by non-sectarian agencies? It is quite possible to practice altruism without being a church member.

A Disappointed Girl.

Here's a coy little problem for the answering:

"DEAR GERALDINE—

"I just had to write you for some advice. I have been going with a man of 28 for about seven months. But a few weeks ago he said he was going on a vacation. And when he returned he came to see me. He told me that he had been on a honeymoon instead of a vacation like he said.

"He told me that he didn't care for his wife, and loved only me. But he had been going with her for a year before he ever met me, and that she loved him and he had asked her to marry him a long time ago. So he said he had to keep his word to her. But he says he can't give me up because he loves me so much, and he wants to go with me just the same.

"I really hate to give him up because I love him also. But he never even told me he had another girl when he was going with me. I really don't know what to do, and I know you can give me some advice.

"EIGHTEEN"

My dear little girl, if I should give you all the advice I yearn to ... they'd have to wrap the printing press in an asbestos blanket. I don't know whether to weep over you or shake you! Are you a moral degenerate or a plain, garden-variety of fool? So "he must keep his word to her," must he? But that doesn't prevent him taking your love on the sly. That's one of the most elastic consciences I've ever met. I have little hope that any one who will believe such a tale will be benefited by my ad- [illegible] by any standard in the world, the man is a cad, a liar, a cheat, a coward, a sneak, a skunk and a scoundrel. Outside of that he's quite a nice chap.

Running Away.

Here's a letter to a woman who is wondering whether she'll run away from another woman who wanted to run away—but change her mind.

"Dear Jerry:

"After reading the letter in las night's paper from Alice V. I hav been wondering if my little ex perience would help her settle her mind. To begin with, if sh could only see how little he care for her—which is proven by th fact that he is making love to he when he knows she is living wit her husband. But I am sure know how she feels.

"I am 30 years old and hav six children, the oldest 13 year old. There have been times whe I felt I could do almost anythin to kill the monotony of my life My husband makes a good salar —$260— but we are so deep i debt we hardly know where t swim out. Two or three year ago I got desperate. No clothes no money to spend when I wante anything—nothing but work an crying babies. We always quar reled on pay day. One day I tol him that I was through, that could stand it no longer. I ha two or three men friends (sup posed to be his friends also) wh kept telling me I was too youn and good looking to be wastin my life like I was. They said the would show me a wonderful tim [illegible] O course with my tired out bod and nerve I was ready to go an threw everything to the winds.

"I packed my suit case and start ed for the door. My husban came and took the suit case an asked me to sit down first and tal to him.

A Vacation.

"He begged and pleaded with m to stay, but I was determined t go. He said, 'Well, before you take this step and give up you home and all claim on your chi dren, suppose you take a tw weeks' trip to some friends in th country and from there to Los An geles. I'll give you all the mone you think you need for the tri and buy your ticket. You are n to write to us nor expect any me sage for two weeks. I will spen my vacation at home caring f the house and children.'

"I agreed. He sent telegrams t my friends and I left two day after. Before the week was out grabbed every baby I saw on th street and could hardly let it g And when my two weeks were u I got on my knees and thank God I had the privilege of goin back. The home, my husband an everything seemed brighter to n after that two weeks away.

"Now, I go every summer. Whe he gets his two weeks off he spen it at home and lets me go for th change and rest and this year h bought me a whole new outfit. W have one night a week that h pays a girl to come and cook di ner for the children and put the to bed. He takes me out to di ner and then to a show. I dre up just like I was going with m best beau and you can tell th world I get a kick out of it. Neith my children or husband suff from my worn-out nerves an more.

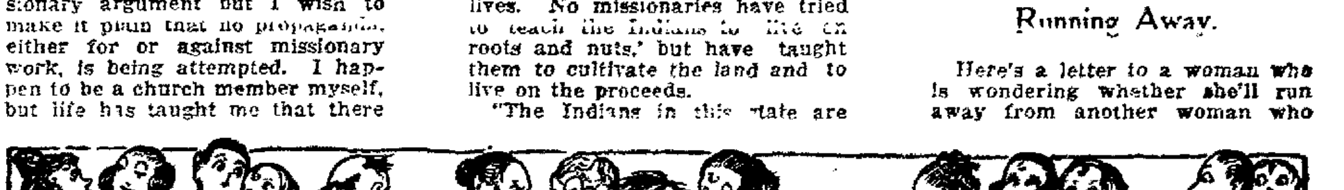

"We can't afford to do it, if w should consider the people w owe money to, but he says we com first. We are not extravagant, b we owe it to the children to kee ourselves in a decent state mind.

"Try it, Alice V. Go to you husband and explain. He has live with you long enough to unde stand you, and beg him to let yo go if only for a few days, but g alone, not with that man. He w throw you over just as quick for some one else soon as he se he has you. And even should yo hate your husband and he th meanest cur on earth, hold you self so high above him he w crawl on his knees to you som day instead of throwing your se in the gutter. Your children w always want to look up to yo and think of you as somethi good and pure. From

"ONE WHO UNDERSTANDS."

That's a fine letter, Pal, and holds the solution for many a pro [illegible] ticularly like that one-night-week-off scheme for that might within the reach of couples of eve humbler income. But somethi leaves me wondering. It doesn seem to occur to you to think the tremendous sacrifice which tired man is making in giving yo all his vacation and doing you work while you are gone. No even a 50-50 split on the rest tim Is that playing fair?

Ingenious Nests of the Birds

English Sparrows and Mud Swallows Are Not Popular Due to Nuisance Created by Their House-building Activities; Crude Character of Nests Built by the Trim Little Wren

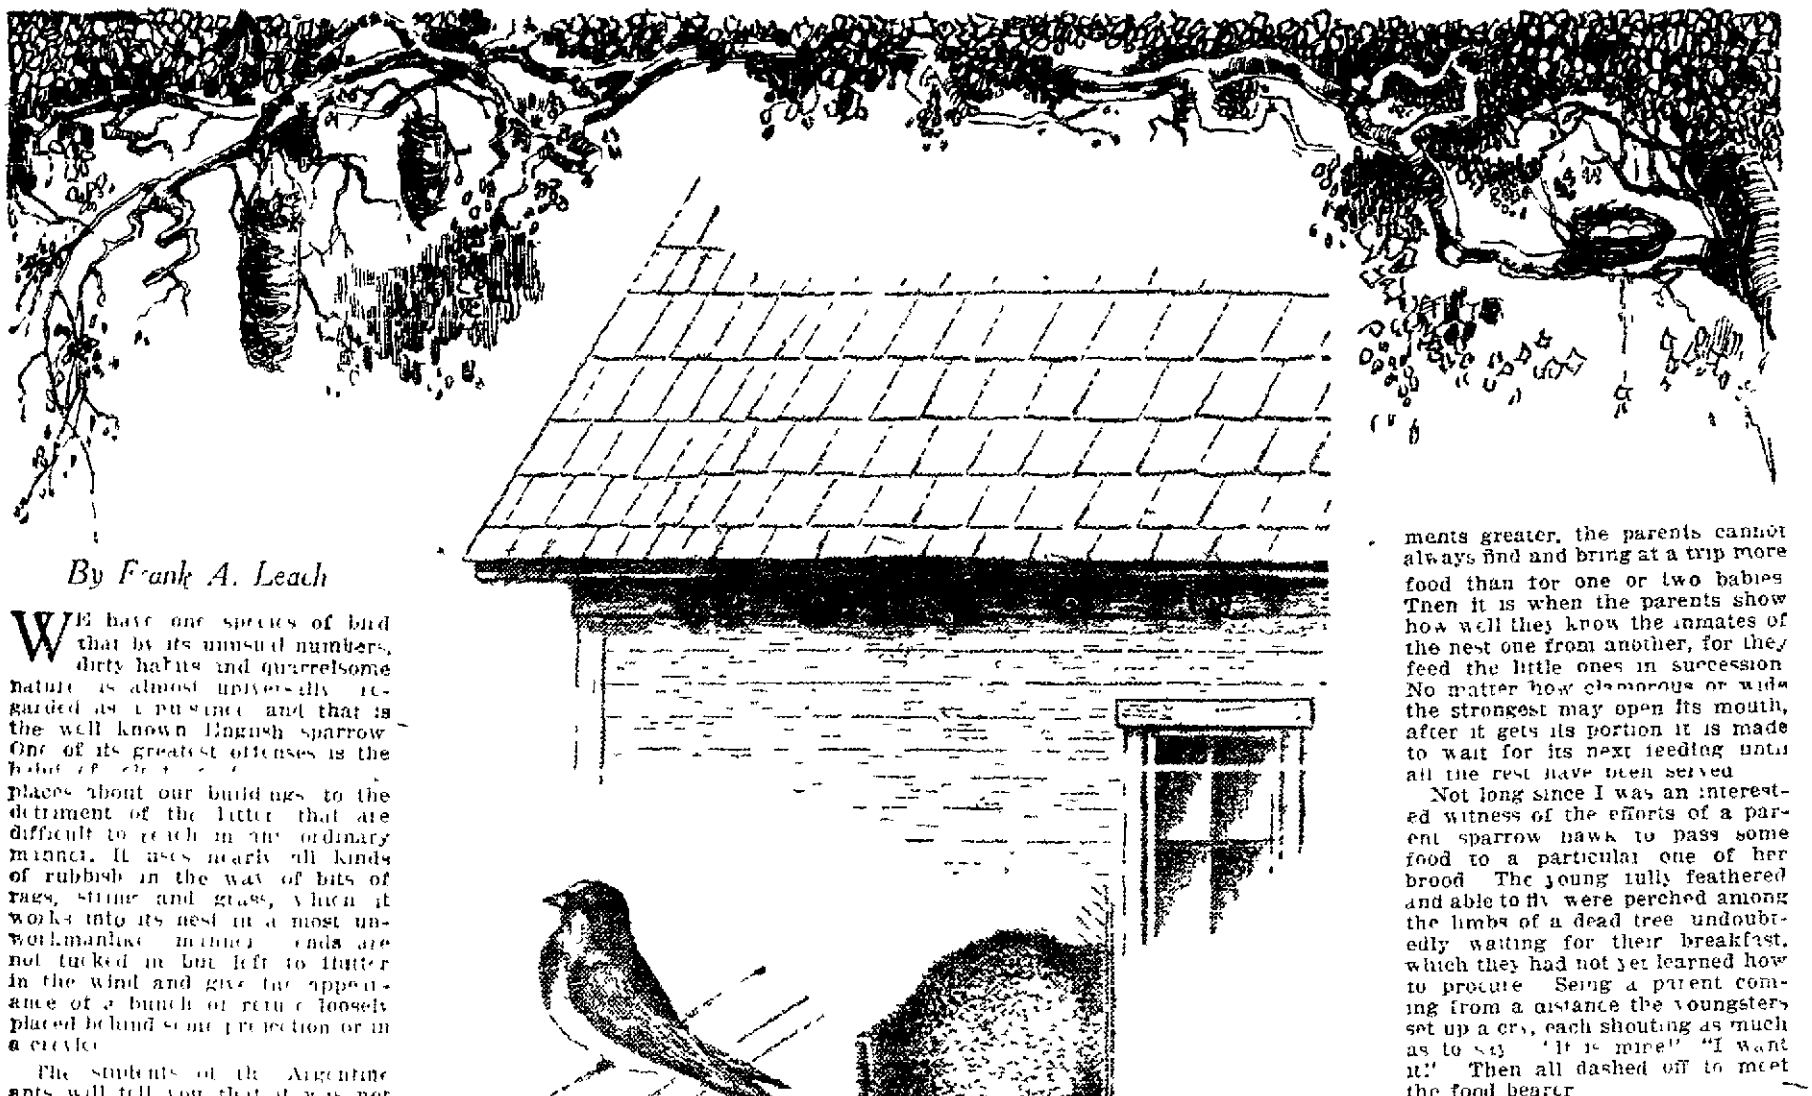

Illustration below is of mud swallow's nests, showing how they cling under eves of dwellings

By Frank A. Leach

We have one species of bird that by its unusual numbers, dirty habits and quarrelsome nature is almost universally regarded as a pest since and that is the well known English sparrow One of its greatest offenses is the habit of [illegible] places about our buildings to the detriment of the latter that are difficult to reach in the ordinary manner. It uses nearly all kinds of rubbish in the way of bits of rags, string and grass, which it works into its nest in a most unworkmanlike manner; ends are not tucked in but left to flutter in the wind and give the appearance of a bunch of refuse loosely placed behind some projection or in a crevice

The students of the Argentine ants will tell you that it was not very long before that when this additional household affliction arrived on California's shores. There is good reason to believe the latter pest is largely responsible for the reduction of the sparrow population by feeding on the nestlings where first hatched

Before there were any of the English sparrows in our state or on the coast the people in many of our towns had to deal with a bird pest that in some ways was more objectionable than the one of foreign origin I refer to what we used to term "mud swallows" Mrs Bailey in her Handbook of Birds of the Western United States classifies them as Petrochelidon lunifrons—with the common name of Cliff Swallows. They are migratory birds and only remained with us during the summer and early fall months. Of course the English sparrows were permanent residents Though what was gained by the lesser form of objectionable presence of the swallows was more than offset by the result of their dirty habits while here, which I will attempt to describe. In doing this, I will give details as I recall them from my experience with the birds when I was a youngster and a resident of Napa City. The conditions that prevailed there existed in neighboring settlements possibly in less degree in a few instances

I think it was in the month of April when the swallows made their first appearance and in the course of a few days there was scarce a story and a half or two story building in the town under the eaves of which a pair to half a dozen or even more pairs were not building mud nests. Apparently the eaves of one-story houses were not high enough to suit their fancy. The court house was the most popular place for nest building of all the structures in the community. The cornice of all four sides of the [illegible] hundreds of nests hulking from the wall underneath it. The sides of the building and its windows were smeared and bedaubed with the whitish liquid excrement from the birds working on the nests and the filth was augmented by the frequent droppings of particles of the mud the birds were using in nest construction

The nests were globular in shape a trifle smaller than an average tubular orifice. They were constructed entirely with mud which at Napa was gathered on the banks of the river that flows through the town. The birds could be seen in great flocks hovering over the muddy banks scooping up pellets of the [illegible] in their bills. This operation was accompanied by a kind of a soft wheezing sound

The construction of the nests was begun by plastering a foundation for the work on a wall from which the bottom part of the nest was built out, pellet by pellet, until it took on the shape of a saucer, on which the remainder of the nest was formed. If the birds met with no disturbance a pair would complete a nest in a week or ten days time Before egg laying began, the birds lined the interior with feathers It was generally thought that the pests became the refuge of noxious insect vermin, such as bedbugs etc Although I dug out many nests of the swallows I never discovered any evidences that would sustain the charg

Many householders kept long poles in a convenient place with which to punch the nests down as fast as they appeared. But the swallows possessed a bull dog pertinacity of purpose, and would persist in the attempt to build a nest in a chosen spot, regardless of the number of times their work was knocked down Possibly this continuous warfare against the mud nests may have been the cause of the great reduction of the species and the abatement of the nest building nuisance

The crude character of the nests made by the trimmest of all our little birds the wren, and the coarse material used in their construction is emphasized when compared with the nests made by the bush-tits another wee bird common in our state The bush tit is a trifle smaller than the wren with nothing particularly striking about it except its size Yet it constructs a nest that universally excites admiration for beauty of form or design, mechanical skill, ingenuity and the neatness with which it is [illegible]

The nest is made in purse shape seven or eight inches in length or [illegible] in diameter with an entrance hole near the top of about the size of the end of a person's finger those that I have seen were suspended in oak trees in such a way as not to attract attention In fact the bits of lichen with which the outsides were so neatly decorated contributed to the appearance of being a part of a limb. The materials used are of the finest hair like grasses, [illegible] outside, while the most delicate of feathers are selected for lining the interior

Mrs Irene Wheelock, one of the best authorities on the habits of our birds in the nesting season seems inclined to the idea that after the period of incubation begins the female does not leave the nest, depending upon the faithful attention of her mate for food

An incident that came under my observation might be considered as tending to corroborate the conclusions of Mrs Wheelock. A boy employed at garden work at Diablo discovered a pair of bush-tits constructing a nest in an oak tree After it was apparently finished, for about a week or more, he did not see anything of the birds so he concluded the birds had been killed or had abandoned the nest Thereupon he took the nest down and carried it some distance and presented it to Mr Thorning whom he knew to be interested in the study of bird life. The recipient pleased with the present, proceeded to inspect the interior when to his amazement he discovered the mother bird was still inside the nest During all the commotion incident to the taking down and carrying the nest away the faithful little mother made no attempt to abandon the six eggs that meant so much to her but when the top of the nest was cut apart for the purpose of inspection her fright finally overcame her loyalty, then she took flight and disappeared

However, the facts related are insufficient to establish that it is the practice of the bush-tit females generally to constantly remain on the nest during the period of incubation though they may indicate the probability of it It is known that the males of some other species of birds feed their mates while on their nests I have seen the willow goldfinch males so attend the females, and from what I have seen I would not be surprised to learn that the practice is common with the California woodpeckers but that the females do not leave the nest during incubation is another matter, one that would require an unusual amount of patience and time to determine

Students of bird habits find much [illegible] feed their young, and they have found that the feeding is not done in a haphazard way, but that the operation is conducted in a systematic manner with a display of intellect on the part of the old birds that is surprising to those who have not credited birds with possessing any degree of intelligence. A family of four or five young is common among the greatest number of [illegible] though some [illegible] there are others that have a dozen or more The conduct of the parent birds more especially the mother, is most noticeable among species where the young number from four to six.

The parent birds plainly show that they are able to identify each member of the young families or know one from another, as readily as if the inmates of a nest bore the name of Johnnie, Ruth, Sammy or Jane, etc In the first stage of the growth of the little nestlings the parent birds are able to bring enough food in their crops "to go around the table," or nearly so at least. But later on when the youngsters get bigger and their requirements greater, the parents cannot always find and bring at a trip more food than for one or two babies Then it is when the parents show how well they know the inmates of the nest one from another, for they feed the little ones in succession No matter how clamorous or wide the strongest may open its mouth, after it gets its portion it is made to wait for its next feeding until all the rest have been served

Not long since I was an interested witness of the efforts of a parent sparrow hawk to pass some food to a particular one of her brood The young fully feathered and able to fly were perched among the limbs of a dead tree undoubtedly waiting for their breakfast, which they had not yet learned how to procure Seeing a parent coming from a distance the youngsters set up a cry, each shouting as much as to say "It is mine!" "I want it!" Then all dashed off to meet the food bearer

There are no gentle actions in the conduct of hawks, old or young they are among the "rough necks" of the bird family When the old bird and the young ones neared one and another in the flight, it appeared for an instant as if there might be a head-on collision This was avoided, however, by the former darting to one side There followed an exhibition of wing work on the part of both that would be hard to describe. After much dodging whirling up and down first one way then another, the parent apparently succeeded in passing the object she carried to one of the young ones and flew away The unfed resumed a position in the dead tree and were waiting the return of the parent when I had to leave the scene

Another case that came under my observation illustrating the possession of capacity to discriminate for a purpose on the part of parent birds, involved a woodpecker family. Birds of this tribe excavate places in tree limbs, or in large posts, for their nests, making a roomy cavity, with a round hole for entrance just large enough to admit one bird at a time This season I had the pleasure of watching the feeding of a brood of young woodpeckers until the latter became well feathered and strong enough to climb up from the bottom of the nest and stick a head out of the entrance hole, there was nothing of unusual interest in the frequent visits of the parent birds to the nest In the course of time though one of the young which by the coloration of its head indicated that it was a male, became sufficiently strong and active to take a position in the interior of the cavity or nest whereby it could put its head out of the hole and watch for the approach of the parents with food Like most of all other young birds, it was exceedingly piggish in its actions and was [illegible] ments of its brothers and sisters, compelled to remain in the bottom of the nest

If the old birds had not possessed the intelligence that directed them in determining the needs of each one of the brood, the 'pig' at the entrance would have taken all of the food with disastrous results to the rest of the brood. But the wisdom of the parents was equal to the [illegible] the "smarty" was compelled to wait before did not obtain any more than its share of food, although it was frequently so unmannered as to attempt to snatch the morsels intended for others of the family from the mouths of the parents. On one occasion when it failed in such action it viciously struck the parent on the side of the head. The latter quickly hopped out of reach and turned its head with astonishment, as much as if it wanted to say: "You sassy thing." However, the impudence and rude actions of the youngster did not prevent the parents from leaning in and at other times going all the way into the nest to feed the weaker young birds of the family.

Hunting the Earthquake Nests

Naval Vessels and Scientists at Work Locating Deep Holes and Faults in Ocean Floor; Condition of Pacific Sea Bottom Holds Key to Disturbances Over Western Area

By Frank Cliff

NOW they are at work ferreting out the "earthquake nests"—discovering the big holes and rifts in the ocean floor where the tremors originate.

Uncle Sam has three steamers, two naval vessels, five hundred expert seamen and a group of scientists from the Carnegie Institute out on the Pacific at the present time taking soundings and making observations to determine why California and the rest of the Pacific Coast receives vibratory treatment from the hands of the earth gods. The work will occupy until late in 1925. Later the vicinity of the Hawaiian Islands will be charted.

The ships are the torpedo boats Corry, in command of Lieutenant Commander B. H. Bieri, and the Hull, in command of Lieutenant Commander S. F. Heim, and the steamers Discovery, the Pioneer and the Guide. The Carnegie Institute is represented by Professor Bailey Willis, geologist of Stanford University, and Professor Andrew Cooper Lawson of the University of California, as well as other experts in seismographic research.

The vessels are detailed to make a complete survey and map of the Pacific. Ocean bottom from the end of Lower California to Alaska by means of the Sonic depth finder.

This instrument, a development of the late war, depends for its results upon the length of time taken by an oscillation sent from the vessel to strike the bottom of the sea and return to the receiving instrument. Exhaustive tests have proven it to be extremely accurate and it has the added advantage of being serviceable while the ship is proceeding at normal speed. Soundings of the bottom are taken at regular intervals ranging from fifteen minutes to an hour, depending upon the character of the sea bottom as it is revealed.

Part of the survey embracing the area off part of Lower California and north almost to San Francisco has been almost completed and the chart of the bottom is being prepared. This is the first survey in sixty years. A surprising discovery was made that 90 miles off San Diego the Pioneer located on Cortes Bank a submarine mountain which came within a few feet of the surface. At other points deep rents and canyons in the ocean bottom have been revealed.

The existence of another submarine mountain of considerable size is known in the vicinity of Cape Mendocino through previous hand lead soundings and a thorough investigation will be made of it by the Sonic detectors of the three navy vessels. These mountain tops furnish some of our best fishing banks.

The boats are planning to work north during the coming summer. When the survey is completed it will give the most perfect record of the Pacific Coast sea bottom that has ever been made, and it is hoped will definitely determine the location of the great submarine valleys and rifts responsible for

The work of the Corry, Hull, Discovery, Pioneer and Guide may also definitely place the seal of official approval upon the existence of the lost continent of Lemuria, which is the Pacific's Atlantis. Geologists figure this occupied a greater area than the latter. Lemuria is represented by Easter Island, which at present has the world guessing because of the probability that the recent Chilian earth and sea disturbances may have again submerged it along with its mysterious stone statues.

Such holes in the bottom of the Pacific as the Tuscarora Deep and Hole are to be sounded out also by the three ships. The latter, the deepest hole yet discovered on the face of the earth, was found by the United States navy collier Nero. Its depth has never been accurately determined and, according to sailors, it goes right through the earth. The other hole was found by the United States frigate, after which it was named. Both lie in the North Pacific ocean.

That there are others of these great depths is shown by the action of the sea following many of the great earthquakes of recent times. The shock comes and then the waters of the sea recede gently, showing that part of the sea bottom has dropped and the ocean is rushing in. This movement goes on from all sides and then when the newly created gap is filled the waters come together and create a counter wave, which rushes back on the shore, sweeping all before it. This has been the situation in nearly all of the earthquakes off the South American Coast and Alaska and slightly so off California.

According to David Starr Jordan "the earthquakes of California are purely mechanical in their origin. The coast of California and along the whole Pacific is slowly rising. Perhaps some part of the Pacific Ocean is sinking, as part of the movement. The rise of this heavily loaded and much broken area is accompanied by heavy strain. This the break in the rocks apparently relieves. There are two sets of disturbances. Eruptive earthquakes are explosions about a volcano. Tectonic earthquakes are breaks in the overloaded or overstrained crust of the earth. To the last class belong most earthquakes, certainly almost all that have been felt in the United States. In every tectonic earthquake there is somewhere a fault or rift of rock."

According to the North Pacific pilot chart of the United States Hydrographic Bureau for March there are two general classes of seismic sea waves. The first is due to the sinking of the sea bottom, and is characterized by the withdrawal of the water after the earthquake, to be followed later by the return of a great wave, and the second is due to an uplift of the ocean bottom and is characterized by the sudden rise of the sea without any previous withdrawal from the shore. Most of the historical inundations of the world have been due to earthquakes of the first class.

"The phenomena, according to the government report, "usually noted are: First, an earthquake; second, after a short interval the sea is noticed to be draining away, laying bare the bottom where it is ordinarily deep enough for ships to anchor; third, after an interval of an hour or so, the sea is seen to be returning as a mighty wave washing everything before it, and thus carrying ships shoreward and stranding them; fourth, having swept the shore, the sea again withdraws and lays bare the harbor as before, and after about the same interval again return as a second great wave. The draining of these shows it is filling up a created depression in the level caused by a falling in of the sea bottom. Seismic waves of the second class are produced by the uplift of the sea bottom into submarine ridges or plates and islands. In such cases the water rises suddenly without previously withdrawing from the shore.

"By a study of the charts of deep sea soundings throughout the world it can be told quite closely what the expected state of seismic [illegible] be, for wherever there are [illegible] deep oceanic troughs situated adjacent to mountainous ridges, culminating either below or above the surface of the ocean, disturbances of the crust of the earth are likely to be prevalent. In these regions the forces of nature are, in fact, generally engaged in uniting up the ridges by forcing under them material pushed from beneath the undermined floor of the adjacent deepening trough.

"The profound depths of the ocean just off the eastern part of the Aleutian chain is one of the great breeding grounds of world shakers. A rather small basin in the ocean bottom has here a depth of nearly four thousand fathoms, and the descent to it is by a long and strong gradient."

This prolific field is one of the most interesting to be explored most thoroughly by the government ships and scientists during this coming summer and fall.

After great earthquakes in the Aleutian region, states the report, "new islands are frequently raised from the sea and several new volcanoes have broken out within historical time. Seismic sea waves of the first class frequently follow, the water first withdrawing from the range of islands toward the trough to the south and then returning later as a great wave. This shows that the sea bottom to the south sinks after the earthquakes by which the region is visited. As the islands, and, in fact, the whole mass of submarine mountains are lifted by the disturbance and the sea bottom afterward sinks, it seems that lava is expelled from beneath the trough and pushed under the adjacent range. The bed of the sea then gives down to fill up the partial cavity from which the molten rock has been expelled."

On June 15, 1896, a world shaking submarine earthquake occurred in Tuscarora Deep, the trough-like abyss in the bed of the ocean just eastward of Japan, and which is also to be explored by the expedition. After the characteristic withdrawal of the water the coast was inundated over a length of 300 miles by waves which were said to have risen to a height of 50 feet. A two-masted schooner was washed 500 yards inland and the destruction to life and property was very great.

A series of great rifts is thought to exist off the Pacific coasts of the two Americas because of this type of earth shock and its resultant wave. The great earthquake of Lima, October 28, 1724, was marked by a withdraway of the water from the coast, followed by a wave reported to be 880 feet high, which swept over Callao. Twenty-three ships were sunk in the harbor and many others were carried far inland.

In 1835 Chili suffered an earthquake of this type, which swept everything to sea, in three great successive waves. In 1868 Peru and Chili were visited again by waves generated by a submarine disturbance which swept inland for many miles and drowned 25,000 people. A United States warship, the Wateree, was carried a quarter of a mile inland. In 1877 another earthquake caused a tidal wave to shove this wreck still further inland. The effects of this disturbance were noticeable all over the Pacific and as far away as the Samoan islands, Australia and Japan.

The disturbances of November of last year which may have caused the complete disappearance of Easter Island, were felt over an equally large area and the tides were effected even in San Francisco bay, over 5000 miles to the north. Samoa, 5377 miles, and the Hawaiian Islands also felt the effect of the sinking and resulting tidal waves.

The investigations of earthquake and volcanic conditions in the north show that California is closely connected with Alaskan coast [illegible] disturbances, there appearing to be an affinity between disturbances here and with similar phenomena in the north. The floor of the Bering Sea seems to be greatly unsettled. Many of our shakes and tidal disturbances are due to the situation around the Bogoslof Islands. These are three in number, and have all been thrown up in historical times. The last made its appearance in 1906 at the time of the San Francisco shake and there is every evidence to think that although separated from this region by 3000 miles, there is a decided connection between it and California through the so-called Tomales Portola fault.
